Narrative Description
(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Lawrenceville Historic District includes the majority of the Lawrenceville neighborhood of Pittsburgh, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, situated along the south bank of the Allegheny River approximately three to five miles northeast of Pittsburgh's Point, where the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers meet to form the Ohio River. The district includes 5,217 resources, including 5,152 buildings, 7 sites, 34 structures, and 9 objects, in its 916 acres spanning areas dedicated to commercial, industrial, institutional, and residential uses, in addition to historic landscapes belonging to parks and cemeteries. The Lawrenceville Historic District occupies a slope that rises gently from the Allegheny River to Butler Street—Lawrenceville's main commercial street—and more steeply from Butler Street to the district's highest points near Penn Avenue. Penn Avenue is Lawrenceville's secondary thoroughfare and contains a mixture of commercial and residential buildings. Butler Street and Penn Avenue meet at a triangular intersection known as Doughboy Square and are linked by numbered streets which also extend northwest from Butler Street toward the river. The Allegheny Valley Railroad (AVRR) runs parallel to the Allegheny River. Between it and Butler Street, the relatively-flat riverbank areas of Lawrenceville contain the district's remaining resources from its historic industrial complexes, as well as many residential blocks occupied mainly by two-story (39.7%) and two-and-a-half-story (46.7%) brick and frame rowhouses. Southeast of Butler Street, the district is primarily residential, interspersed with associated uses such as schools, churches, corner stores, two cemeteries, two city parks, and a modern hospital. Residential properties comprise 3,965 resources (81.0%) in the district; commercial, 338 (6.9%); industrial, 22 (0.4%); religious, 15 (0.3%), civic 9 (0.2%), and landscape (including gardens and side yards) 47 (1%). Sixty-four (64) parcels (1.3%) are used as parking lots, and 157 parcels (3.2%) are vacant (unused) land. Most of the resources in the district were constructed between ca. 1850 and 1940 in the architectural styles including Greek Revival (0.2%), Gothic Revival (0.2%), Italianate (23.9%), Second Empire (5.2%), Richardsonian Romanesque (1.0%), Queen Anne (22.2%), Classical revival (3.1%), Colonial Revival (10.7%), Craftsman (8.5%), Tudor Revival (1.1%), Art Deco (0.2%), and Modern (1.8%). Some buildings predate 1850 and are vernacular in design. Buildings whose current appearance is unstyled make up 52% of the district's resources. About 4.5% of buildings in the district were constructed after 1975. The most prevalent wall cladding materials are brick (64.4%), vinyl (15.6%), aluminum (6.8%), and synthetics (3.8%). Only 0.9% of buildings exhibit wood cladding. Lawrenceville is characterized generally by its density, its modestly-sized, tightly-sited buildings—most of them built to the sidewalk and attached in commercial or residential rows—and its predominantly Victorian-era residential, commercial, industrial, and landscape architecture. Together, these impart the character of a populous, moderately prosperous, pedestrian-oriented neighborhood which functioned almost as a self-contained city during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Beyond the boundaries of the historic district, adjacent neighborhoods—the Strip District, Polish Hill, and Bloomfield to Lawrenceville's south, and Garfield, Stanton Heights, and a small section of Morningside to its east—have their own distinctive characters defined by topography and separate histories of industry, employment, and development. Among Lawrenceville's thousands of individual resources, integrity varies widely (11.1%, 58.2% and 30.7% of resources were rated low, medium, and high integrity, respectively). The district's resources are 62% contributing and 38% non-contributing, and as a whole, the district retains the qualities that link it to its unique history and development.

The Lawrenceville Historic District occupies parts of three political subdivisions of the city of Pittsburgh: the Sixth, Ninth, and Tenth wards, sometimes called Lower, Central, and Upper Lawrenceville, respectively. Because of this district's size and complexity, it is described in detail below according to section: Butler Street, Penn Avenue, Sixth Ward (below Penn Avenue), Sixth Ward (above Penn Avenue), Ninth Ward (below Butler Street), Ninth Ward (above Butler Street), and Tenth Ward.

Narrative Description

Butler Street

Butler Street is Lawrenceville's main commercial street and is lined with predominantly masonry buildings, most containing first-floor storefronts and ranging from two to four stories in height. The Lawrenceville Historic District contains 21 blocks of Butler Street, beginning at 34th Street at Doughboy Square and continuing to 55th Street, the district boundary. Beyond this, Butler Street continues into the northeastern section of Lawrenceville and the adjacent neighborhood of Highland Park, following a thinly-developed course which lacks the commercial character maintained in the historic district.

One hundred eighty-six (186), or 55.0 %, of Lawrenceville's commercial resources are located on Butler Street between 34th and 55th streets. Butler Street's historic commercial buildings range from one to four stories in height, with most being two or three stories. All but about 15 buildings exhibit of brick or masonry wall materials. The majority of the commercial buildings are approximately 20 feet wide and are built to their side lot lines. A handful of Butler Street's commercial buildings are significantly wider than 20 feet. These include two banks and several commercial blocks that contain more than one storeroom (Photo82). Two historic banks within the district, the former Metropolitan National Bank at the corner of 41st Street (Photo 75) and the former Allegheny Valley Bank in the 5100 block of Butler Street (Photo 54), have parking lots with frontage on Butler Street.

Butler Street's historic fabric is particularly intact from 36th Street northeast to Lodi Way, a distance of two and a half blocks (Photo 28); between 40th and 50th streets (Photos 74-82); and between Stanton Avenue (51st Street) and 55th Street at the northeastern end of the historic district (Photos 84, 85, 91-94). The oldest building on Butler Street is believed to be the 1830s Naser's Hotel, at the corner of 41st Street, within the original Lawrenceville town plan (Photo 74). Naser's Hotel and two buildings on Butler Street in the former village of Hatfield, a dwelling at number 4821 and a former dwelling converted to office use at number 4839 (corner of 49th Street), show slight Greek Revival influence. The latter two buildings were constructed by about 1850.

The Gothic Revival style Allegheny Cemetery gatehouse on the southeast side of Butler Street between 46th and 47th streets was constructed in 1848 and enlarged in 1870 (Photo 105). A building whose façade complements the gatehouse stands across Butler Street at number 4727. It is a four-story brick commercial and residential building with a mansard roof and stone façade whose details suggest Italianate influence. The building was present by 1872, when the G.M. Hopkins plat map identified it as A.J. Harbaugh's Cemetery Marble & Granite Works.

On Butler Street, the Italianate style came into use during or before the Civil War. The style may be best represented in a three-story commercial and residential building at 4401 Butler Street, constructed in 1871 (Photo 80). The 4900 block of Butler Street is the site of several Italianate houses, both free-standing at 4919 and in a party-wall row of three (4929-33) at the corner of 50th Street. The dwelling at the end of the row (4933) contains a storefront. The house at 4919 Butler Street was the home of Charles Parkin, a partner in the Crescent Steel works three blocks away. It retains a pressed brick façade, elaborate metal façade window trim, two-over-two double-hung wood sash windows, and double front doors featuring panels and topped by a transom. Another outstanding Italianate commercial and residential building stands at 3710 Butler Street (at Ater Way). The building has its original storefront details, including a centered, recessed front opening and the former business proprietor's name "Dadowski" below the cornice. Above are two-over-two wood sash double hung windows, wooden window headers and brackets, and an attic dormer with Italianate panels.

The Second Empire style is represented, among other locations, in a four-story building at 3701 Butler Street, constructed in the early 1880s as the store and home of a wholesale liquor dealer. The corner building has a mansard with hexagonal and rectangular slates, carved limestone lintels, a limestone belt course connecting sills, a first-story commercial cornice with modillions, and a Palladian-influenced front dormer. At the second-story level, a corner stone bears the names of the two streets on which the building fronts. The building's ornamentation continues along 37th Street with paired window openings with limestone lintels, sills, and belt courses, mansard dormers, fluted chimneys, and a metal fire escape. Another four-story Second Empire style building stands at 4409-11 Butler Street. (Photo 80).

By the end of the 1880s, Butler Street was also home to buildings in the Queen Anne style. The street's most imposing Queen Anne building is probably the four-story 4023 Butler Street (Photo 74). The building's 22-foot-wide façade is distinguished by its elaborately-ornamented brick, terra cotta, and brownstone façade and its height, towering above not only the two-story Naser's Hotel to the northeast, but also a three-story Second Empire building of around 1880 on its southwest side. A dormer parapet extends several feet above the top of the fishscale-slate-clad mansard, and overshadows diagonal and horizontal corbels, round-arched window openings on the third and fourth stories, ornamental belt courses, and ornamental terra cotta plaques below the third story windows. The building's façade looks directly up Fisk Street, a well-preserved residential street that extends from Butler Street uphill past Penn Avenue. The upper two stories of the façade of the three-story Buvinger Building of 1883 at 4407 Butler Street suggest Queen Anne influence with limestone lintels, sills, and belt courses, half-round plaques above the second-story lintels, a centered gable flanked by small brackets, and a pedimented arrangement of paired windows, outlined by classical columns, centered on the façade's second story (Photo 80).

A four-story commercial and residential building at 4122-4124 Butler Street shows Richardsonian Romanesque influence in its round-arched and interconnected window openings, rough-cut stone lintels and storeroom delineation, and arched corbels (Photo 77). The building's fourth story originally contained one of Butler Street's several meeting halls. Because it is situated at a bend in Butler Street, it can be seen for several blocks in each direction. The Roberto Clemente Museum, occupying the former Engine House No. 25 at 3339 Penn Avenue, has Richardsonian Romanesque elements such as an arched entrance of rough-cut stone, round-arched second-story transoms with interlocking arches, half-round and quarter-round façade sections, and prominent brick corbels. At the southwest corner of Butler and 46th streets (4521 Butler Street), a former hotel of 1889 shows Richardsonian influence in its rough-cut stone lintels, some of which are arched on the 46th Street elevation. The three-story commercial and residential Hagerty Building at 5105-07 Butler Street displays similar rough-cut stone lintels and belt courses (Photo 53). At 5202 and 5210 Butler Street, round-arched windows of the third story of the façades, linked by stone belt courses, indicate Richardsonian influence as well.

Butler Street in the historic district is also the site of some buildings dating to the late nineteenth century that are substantial but display relatively little stylistic influence. The three-story commercial and residential buildings at 3801, 3803, 3811, and 5119 Butler Street have brick corbels, smooth stone sills, lintels, and belt courses, and intact commercial cornices. At 4308-28 Butler Street, the Arsenal Lanes bowling building above several storerooms retains the place, form, and public recreational use of when it was constructed as a roller skating rink ca. 1894 (Photo 82). The massive building, although unstyled, has brick pilasters with modest stone ornament, wood dentils, and tooled foundation stone. The ca. 1890 former Engine House No. 9 at Butler Street and McCandless Avenue (5255 Butler Street), now an architectural millwork shop, also does not exemplify a specific style but its historic exterior has been meticulously preserved (Photo83). Further northeast, a three-story commercial block at 5306-12 Butler Street, constructed ca. 1900, has both Folk Victorian storefront cornice ornamentation and modest Richardsonian Romanesque-inspired stone trim at the main cornice.

Butler Street's more significant buildings of the early twentieth century evidence a break from the form and details of their nineteenth century neighbors. In 1902 the Beaux Arts Style Pennsylvania National Bank was built at Butler Street and Penn Avenue (3400 Butler Street) on what had been the site of a ca. 1870 bank (Photo 31). At 41st Street, the former Metropolitan National Bank (4101 Butler Street; now PNC Bank) was constructed in 1903 with Classical Revival details designed by Gaggin & Gaggin of Syracuse, New York (Photo75). Butler Street's other large bank building, the limestone-clad Allegheny Valley Bank at 5137 Butler Street, was constructed in the Art Deco Style ca. 1930 (Photo 54), as was the Arsenal School (220 40th Street), built on part of the former Arsenal grounds facing Butler Street and extending a city block between 39th and 40th streets.

Two of the district's landscape resources, Leslie Park and Allegheny Cemetery, have presences on Butler Street. The entrance to Leslie Park is at Butler and 46th Street and is marked by a World War I commemorative statue by Frank Vittor erected in 1921. Adjacent to the park, Allegheny Cemetery fronts onto Butler Street from 47th Street to Stanton Avenue (51st Street). The cemetery frontage consists of historic stone walls, wrought iron fencing, and the original 1848 gatehouse and its 1870 addition (Photo 105).

Penn Avenue

Penn Avenue is Lawrenceville's secondary commercial street and includes a number of dwellings, a few institutional properties, and frontage of both Allegheny and St. Mary's cemeteries mixed in with commercial buildings. Penn Avenue extends through the Lawrenceville Historic District, increasing in elevation, between 33rd and Mathilda Streets.

The oldest structure along Penn Avenue in the historic district is probably the stone wall between 39th and 40th streets that marked the boundary of the United States Arsenal (Photo 6). Five blocks east along Penn Avenue stands the stone gateway to St. Mary's Cemetery. The gateway's age is not known, but its Gothic Revival style and the cemetery's 1849 founding suggest mid-nineteenth century construction. A wrought-iron fence and a stone wall extend east along Penn Avenue to the border of St. Mary's and Allegheny cemeteries. Allegheny Cemetery's southern boundary along Penn Avenue is marked by a gatehouse built in the Richardsonian Romanesque style in 1887, a wrought iron fence set in a stone curb, and limestone pillars on which "Allegheny Cemetery" is inscribed, marking the cemetery's Penn Avenue entrance and exit.

Various late nineteenth and early twentieth century architectural styles are represented along Penn Avenue in the historic district, including Italianate and Second Empire dwellings and commercial buildings, Queen Anne dwellings, and a three-story Richardsonian Romanesque apartment building at 4404 Penn Avenue (Photos 1, 4). The four-story Wilson's Drugstore building (4101 Penn Avenue) at the northeast corner of Penn Avenue and Main Street was constructed ca. 1890 with rough-cut stone lintels, stone storeroom piers, additional carved stone ornamentation, decorative terra cotta plaques, and brick corbels (Photo 2). It is among the avenue's most prominent buildings because of its height, Richardsonian Romanesque influence, and neon signage on the storefront facing the busy intersection of Penn Avenue and Main Street. Like Butler Street, Penn Avenue is the site of three-story brick commercial and residential buildings with rough-cut stone lintels that are otherwise unstyled, such as at 4047 and 4049 Penn Avenue (Photo 5).

The even-numbered side of the 3700 block of Penn Avenue may contain the avenue's most diverse group of contributing buildings within the historic district (Photos 9-10). At 3704 Penn Avenue, the mid-1870s three-story brick Italianate townhouse of brewer Robert Watson was a front addition to a modest wood frame house of ca. 1850. Three-story Italianate commercial buildings with cast iron storefront components stand at 3700-02 Penn Avenue. At 3708-14 Penn, three-story Romanesque-influenced party wall dwellings have round-arched upper windows and stone belt courses; one of the houses was altered with vinyl siding in the 1990s. At 3720-22 Penn, a mansard roof indicates the Second Empire style, but the 38th Street elevation makes clear that the mansard was added to an older side-gabled structure. On the opposite side of Penn, a brick wall extends along part of Penn and 38th Street, dating to the time when three substantial dwellings faced that side of Penn. Several 1990s townhouses now occupy that side of the block.

At 3600 Penn Avenue, at the corner of Denny Street, stands the Second Empire style Kloman House of 1864 (Photo 12). The house occupies the site of the Foster family homestead, and Denny Street at the side and rear of the property appears to follow a Foster property line from the early nineteenth century. The 3500 and 3600 blocks of Penn contain a mix of two- to four-story Italianate and Second Empire houses and small-scale commercial buildings, intermingled with infill construction of the past twenty years (Photo 13).

The Sixth Ward below Penn Avenue

The section of the Lawrenceville Historic District that is in the Sixth Ward below Penn Avenue extends from the western boundary of the district at 33rd Street to the ward boundary at 40th Street, from Penn Avenue northeast to the Allegheny River. This area is characterized by densely-built free-standing and party-wall houses, the landmark St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church, a mixture of historic and modern industrial uses between the river and Butler Street, and various land uses now present on the former United States Arsenal site which historically occupied the swath from Penn Avenue to the Allegheny River between 39th and 40th Streets.

Few resources associated with the arsenal are still present, but one of these is the original stone wall which still encloses the former arsenal grounds at Penn Avenue, 39th Street, and 40th Street (Photo 6). On the area of the grounds nearest to Penn Avenue are two mid-nineteenth century magazines and later buildings constructed in the early twentieth century for the United States Marine Hospital, now part of the Allegheny County Health Department. Northeast of this lies Arsenal Park, which contains the former arsenal's powder magazine and incorporates its historic stone wall (Photos 23-25). The ca. 1930 Arsenal School and its grounds occupy the former arsenal property between the park and Butler Street. Between Butler Street and the river, along 39th Street, stand two buildings believed to remain from the arsenal: a two-story brick building constructed in 1866 as officers' quarters and an adjacent, ca. 1900 one-story brick building, possibly a garage (Photos 38-40). A remnant of the arsenal wall stands parallel to the AVRR tracks near the Allegheny River.

Particularly along 38th and 39th streets, both above and below Butler Street, houses remain from Lawrenceville's pre-annexation era (Photos 36-37). Those that were built before the Civil War tend to be of smaller scale, with lower roof and ceiling heights. Conversely, a row of 16-foot-wide, three-story, party-wall dwellings with Queen Anne style façades was built along the 3600 block of Smallman Street in about 1890. The Queen Anne row stands immediately northwest of a strip of both free-standing and party-wall brick Italianate houses on the 3600 block of Charlotte Street (Photos 34-35).

Families of German origin were predominant in the present Sixth Ward below Penn Avenue in the nineteenth century. They established St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church, originally on Butler Street, and Zion Lutheran Church around the corner on 37th Street, both in the 1860s. The current St. Augustine church on 37th Street was designed by John Comes, then working for Rutan & Russell, and constructed between 1899 and 1901. The church's towers can be seen from many points around Lawrenceville (Photo 14).

Thirty-fourth Street just southwest of Doughboy Square is the site of rows of small brick party-wall houses on each side of the street, built by the same investor about two years apart in the 1880s in response to strong demand for inexpensive housing as Lawrenceville's iron and steel mills expanded.

A scrap yard stands on the northwest side of Penn Avenue at 33rd Street, at the southwest edge of the historic district. Buildings within the scrap yard grounds appear to be of modern origin.

On the northwest side of the 3300 block of Smallman Street (3301 Smallman Street) stand four buildings that were part of a Pennsylvania Lubricating Company (later Standard Oil Company of Pennsylvania) works. Three of the buildings, clad in corrugated metal, were components of a factory and were constructed by 1927. The northeasternmost building, clad in brick, was built by 1950 and was used for shipping. Two of the three metal-clad factory buildings have loading docks facing Smallman Street, and the brick building that was used for shipping has a bay that accommodates three vehicles. Two other component buildings of the complex, on Smallman Street at the corners of 33rd and 34th streets, have been demolished. A Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission marker stands along the sidewalk next to one of the metal-clad factory buildings, commemorating the "Pittsburgh grease plant." The marker states, "Long a major producer of lubricating grease for industry, transportation, and the military. In WWII, supplied 5,000,000 pounds of 'Eisenhower grease,' vital to the war effort. Founded here, 1885, by Grant McCargo. After 1929, part of Standard Oil (NJ); operated until 1999." The buildings are now used by a tire company. Other structures between Spruce Way and the Allegheny River that were part of the oil works complex in 1950, including a large warehouse and cooper shop, a pipe shop, and several oil tanks, are no longer standing.

At the north corner of 34th Street and Spruce Way (parcel 48-S-20) stands a one-story and two-story building with the name "Landau." The building is clad in corrugated metal, and its foundation appears to be of brick piers infilled with concrete block. At the corner of 34th Street and Spruce Way the building's corner is cut away or chamfered, making room for a rail siding that once passed the corner. The 1937 City of Pittsburgh Geodetic and Topographic Survey Map depicts the building as the Excelsior Supply Company.

The northwest side of the 3400 block of Smallman Street contains three brick buildings that date to 1950 or earlier (surveyed collectively as 3421 Smallman Street). The northeasternmost building is of brick construction with corbels, three stories, with bricks arranged as quoins. It was occupied by the Pennsylvania Lubricating Company in 1927, and by Franz Distillers in 1937 (Photo 33). Immediately to the southwest are two two-story brick buildings that date to ca. 1930 and were occupied by Best Foods, Inc. in 1937. All three brick buildings are now used by a chemical company. On the same block, at the corner of 35th Street and Spruce Way, stand a complex of two, ca. 1960 corrugated metal buildings that are now part of the Allegheny Plywood Company. The opposite (southeast) side of the 3400 block of Smallman Street is occupied by a large, one-story, gabled, corrugated metal building that was built in two stages between 1994 and 2008.

The lower (northwest) side of the 3500 block of Smallman Street, extending back to a railroad right-of-way, contains four buildings that date to the first half of the twentieth century. The Crucible Steel Company built a one-story steel-framed, brick-clad warehouse at 3509 Smallman Street between ca. 1920. A connected one-story brick office building (3501 Smallman Street) with metal casement windows was constructed between 1927 and 1950. The buildings are now home to a food import business (Photo 73). A short distance southwest at 111 35th Street, a one-story concrete block building labelled "plywood equipment, asphalt warehouse" on the 1950 Sanborn map was constructed in that year. It is now occupied by a business that sells building materials. A one-story brick building with pilasters was built at what is now 3527 Smallman Street between 1905 and 1910. Historic maps dated from 1910 to 1937 show the property as part of the American Steel Foundries; in 1950, the building was occupied by W.S. Chase Driers and Chemicals. The building generally retains its historic exterior appearance, and now contains offices.

A ca. 1895, two-story brick building (90 36th Street) that was formerly part of the McCullough-Dalzell Crucible Company stands at the southwest side of 36th Street near the Allegheny River. Sanborn maps published between 1905 and 1950 indicate that the building was used for storage. A concrete block addition to the northwest elevation of the storage building was constructed between 1927 and 1950, as a warehouse. The Pittsburgh Foundry & Machine Company had its large two-story, steel-clad building constructed at 20 36th Street, on the southwest side of the street, ca. 1915, and it remains there today.

A roofing materials warehouse, one and two stories and of concrete block construction, was built at the west corner of 38th and Foster streets (3739 Foster Street) not long before 1950. Eight small houses had stood on its site. A two-story brick building on 38th and 39th streets (89 38th Street) that was a foundry probably built for the Keystone Bronze Company ca. 1915. The building is clad with brick, with pilasters, and with corrugated metal. In 1937, the building was used by the National Bearing Metals Corporation, and in 1950 it was used as a machine shop and stamping facility by the Wallace E. Kirk Company and the West Penn Machinery Company. Its northwest elevation is clad in brick and has a faded painted sign that reads, "Allied Welding &

Fabricating Co." A one-story addition to the northwest elevation is clad in brick and corrugated metal. The building connects to another metal clad building in the former Keystone Bronze complex fronting on 39th Street (once a stand-alone building) that was later occupied by the Hamilton Pump Company.

This section of the Lawrenceville Historic District extends from the district's southernmost boundary, taking in the former Iron City Brewery complex and properties on the south side of Liberty Avenue, and from 33rd Street to 40th Street.

The most architecturally and historically significant component of its section of the Lawrenceville Historic District is the former Iron City Brewery complex, which contains about a dozen red brick buildings on Liberty Avenue and Sassafras Street (Photo 19). The Iron City complex reflects the brewery's long history on this site, which began shortly after the Civil War and continued into the twenty-first century. Its 1883 office building, designed by Charles Bartberger, on Liberty Avenue at the corner of the Herron Avenue Bridge is probably its best-known and most visually engaging section. The brewery, however, includes a host of significant historic buildings, uniformly of red brick, with several showing signs of deferred maintenance or possible structural concerns. They include the Stock House of 1901 and a four-story stable constructed ca. 1910 on Sassafras Street.

Two blocks east along Liberty Avenue, the former parish buildings of St. John the Baptist include a church building now used as a restaurant and brewpub and the former school, convent, and rectory (Photo 17). The church, school, and convent were all designed by Pittsburgh architect John Comes (then working for Beezer Brothers Architects) and were built after the Irish immigrant parish moved to the site in 1903. This section of the Lawrenceville Historic District is also home to the former Shiloh Baptist Church at 39th and Mintwood streets, built with Richardsonian Romanesque influence in 1903-04 for an African-American congregation.

The residential resources of this section of the historic district are more homogenous than those of other parts of the neighborhood. Most houses are two or two-and-a-half stories in height, with a few standing an entire three stories with the help of a mansard. Brick houses may be scarcer than their wood frame counterparts. The houses which are freestanding have a two- or three-foot walkway along the side, set on a grid extending from Woolslayer Way south to Liberty Avenue. The houses on these streets, Howley and Mintwood streets and Liberty Avenue, Clement, Cabinet, and Woolslayer ways, the numbered streets extending from 36th to 40th, and the diagonal Ligonier and Denny streets, appear to have been constructed between approximately 1870 and 1910. Among the interesting houses in this section of the historic district are a series of two-story red-brick rowhouses occupying both sides of the 3600 block of Mintwood Street, built in 1900; the house at 3601 Mintwood has a two-story round corner (Photos 15-16). The rows were built as an investment by the Denny family, who employed the architect Thomas Scott to design their properties.

The Ninth Ward below Butler Street

Northwest of Butler Street between 40th and 51st streets, the Lawrenceville Historic District illustrates neighborhood development between the 1820s and about 1900, with development proceeding generally, but not exclusively, northeast. William B. Foster's original plan covers the area between 40th Street and Banner Way. Similar to in the Sixth Ward below Butler Street, some of Lawrenceville's oldest buildings are sited there, particularly along 41st Street (Photo 44). One or both of the houses at 157 and 159 41st Street were built before 1830, making them the oldest known dwellings in Lawrenceville. Although the small frame dwellings have been subject to twentieth century alterations including the installation of aluminum siding, they retain the small scale that characterizes houses of that era in Lawrenceville and other Pittsburgh neighborhoods that experienced pre-1850 development. Several other frame dwellings on 41st Street are nearly as old. Foster's lot plan created parcels that were 50 feet wide, apparently anticipating a less densely built and populated neighborhood than existed later in the century. With 50 feet of frontage in a neighborhood of 20-foot wide or narrower houses, some lot owners erected second houses to rent out, or to replace older, smaller houses with more modern dwellings. The streetscape that remains today on and around 41st Street features an eclectic mix of houses built over approximately 80 years, varying by scale, form, setback, size, and style or lack of style.

The lower block of 41st Street also helps illustrate how housing demand and community growth changed Lawrenceville's appearance in the years after the Civil War. A row of 12 two-and-a-half-story brick Italianate party-wall houses went up at 114-136 41st Street in 1880, replacing scattered frame houses and other buildings that had occupied the site when an 1872 plat map was prepared (Photo 42). Similarly, the 1903 construction of the three-story Polish Roman Catholic Holy Family Church and School at 41st and Foster streets replaced houses that had occupied the site. At 177 41st Street, a two-story mid-1830s clapboarded "flounder" house with a Federal Style side door surround is an intact example of Lawrenceville's early built environment (Photo 72). The house was enlarged in 1904 with the construction of a three-story brick mansarded front section, using the 1830s flounder section as a rear ell. The Italian immigrant macaroni manufacturer who commissioned the addition at 177 41st Street was also responsible for the construction of the five-story factory building next door.

Buildings between 42nd and 44th streets also display a haphazard development pattern as a result of a patchwork of subdivisions in the mid-nineteenth century. Most of the houses on these blocks now occupy their own parcels. The earliest houses now standing on 43rd Street date to approximately 1850, and subdivision and development on 44th Street appears to have begun during the Civil War. The majority of the buildings in this area are of brick construction; the remainder are wood frame and clad in various mid- and late nineteenth century materials, and a few in clapboard. A dwelling at 159 43rd Street, at the corner of Foster Street, was constructed ca. 1850 and was set back about 15 feet from 43rd Street; a vertical seam in the brick on the Foster Street elevation shows that the dwelling was enlarged with a front addition when a storeroom was added in the 1880s. The development of this area also included the demolition of the earliest and smallest dwellings to make way for the construction of larger houses. A row of four three-story brick houses with Queen Anne style influence at 149-155 43rd Street, for example, was constructed in 1889, requiring the removal of a small wood frame house on the site. That frame house may have been built around the same time as 160 43rd Street, a small frame dwelling with Greek Revival influence that remains from 43rd Street's earliest development (Photo 68). Nearby at 177 43rd Street, a small older home became the rear ell of a large new Queen Anne style house in the 1890s. Although the Queen Anne style was used in the area, the dominant architectural influence in the immediate area was the Italianate style, with the Second Empire style also in use.

Residential development of the blocks between 44th and 48th streets, below Butler Street, proceeded northeastward between about 1865 and the early 1890s. Most of this area developed as a result of the subdivision of the Ewalt property, whose ca. 1840 Greek Revival mansion stands at 186 Home Street (Photo 58). Unlike the jumbled development of the blocks below Butler Street closer to 40th Street, this section of the neighborhood was laid out in a relatively organized manner. Many of the houses occupy 20-by-100-foot lots, and alley houses are less common. A large majority of the houses are brick single-family homes of several rooms, either free-standing or with party walls. Some houses have mansard roofs, and others were built with attic dormers. Outstanding examples of residential construction in this area include 187 44th Street, a mansarded dwelling of about 1883 (Photo 60); 175 and 177 46th Street, also dating to the 1880s; a well-preserved 1880s corner store building at 146 45th Street; and the houses along Home Street between Plummer Street and Eden Way, constructed in the late 1880s and early 1890s (Photo 57). The most noticeable house on Home Street may be no. 184, three stories with a Richardsonian Romanesque façade. At 4514 Plummer Street stands the Radiant Hall of the 1930s, a former Polish social hall, three stories of red brick with limestone trim. A substantial house at 4520 Plummer Street was built in the 1910s, decades later than most in the neighborhood. Its front overhang and paired façade windows suggest that its builder was familiar with the Prairie style. This immediate neighborhood retains a good level of integrity, possibly because of its predominantly brick construction. Typical alterations appear to date to the mid-twentieth century, an era of relative prosperity for millworkers. They include changes to window and door openings, replacement windows and doors, and loss of brackets and other trim components.

The blocks below Butler Street between 48th and 49th streets, as noted earlier, were laid out ca. 1840 as the village of Hatfield. Similar to the development of the 41st Street area, some of the original 50-foot-wide lots soon contained more than one house (Photos 46, 52). Dwellings within the former village are generally smaller than those nearby and are more likely to be of wood construction and to have received alterations to window openings and other façade components. A wood frame house that appears to contain three rooms and date from the first years of village settlement stands at 167 48th Street, at the corner of Hatfield Street. It is clad in aluminum siding but retains its original form and window openings. Its exceptionally small size, together with the recent pace of construction in the neighborhood, suggests that it is threatened by development. Another noteworthy building in the former village of Hatfield is the two-story Italianate former Bayard School (aka Washington Public School No. 2) at 4830 Hatfield Street, presently being converted to apartments using federal tax credits.

The northwestern section of the former village of Hatfield, between Harrison Street and the Allegheny River, retains no houses and has lost the appearance of a village. The 4800 block of Harrison Street retains a brick manufacturing building (4845 Harrison Street) dating to the late nineteenth or early twentieth century, which bears a limestone sign labeling it the "Pittsburgh Crushed Steel Co." The unstyled building is five bays wide and one to two stories in height, has segmental, rowlock brick arches filled with glass block, with pilasters and corbels, and has a low front-gabled roof (Photo 49). The Pittsburgh Crushed Steel Company, according to a 1936 legal notice published in the Pittsburgh Press, was chartered "for the purpose of manufacturing and dealing in grinding and polishing materials and abrasives made from iron or steel, or both, or any other material, and in the manufacture of, and dealing in supplies incidental thereto, consisting of stone and glass making machinery and stone workers' supplies." In 1905, years before the crushed steel company moved to Harrison Street, the building was part of the H.K. Porter Locomotive Works. Its first floor was then used for carpentry and wood working, and its second floor was used for storing patterns and finished engine cabs. H.K. Porter still used the building for wood working in 1927, but by 1937 it was used by the Pittsburgh Crushed Steel Company; the 1950 Sanborn map indicates the building contained an office and stock. Ca. 1925 an addition was constructed to the southwest along Harrison Street and is two stories in height, eight bays wide, and of red brick construction with pilasters. H.K. Porter used the addition for lumber storage in 1927. Further southwest along Harrison Street, extending to the corner of 48th Street, is a two-story building (4821 Harrison Street) clad in corrugated metal with a corrugated metal roof, which was constructed sometime between 1957 and 1967. Northwest of the above-described buildings that face Harrison Street, between 48th and 49th streets and extending to the AVRR railroad, is another group of industrial buildings that have been connected by various additions to the Pittsburgh Crushed Steel Company building at 4845 Harrison Street. The oldest may be a one-story and two-story foundry at the corner of 49th Street and Hemlock Way (both streets have been vacated). The foundry was constructed between 1893 and 1905, and it is shown as part of the H.K. Porter works on 1905, 1927, and 1937 maps. In 1927, it contained two cupolas and two sets of coke ovens. In 1950, the building was leased to the Pittsburgh Commercial Heat Treating Company. Immediately southwest of the foundry (and now connected to it by an addition) is a three-story brick pilastered former foundry, pattern shop, and pattern storage building. The older section of this building was constructed between 1893 and 1905, and an addition to the northwest side was in place by 1927. In 1927, the building's north corner was open on the first floor to allow a rail spur to pass through. The building then contained a coke oven and coke bins. It was still part of the H.K. Porter works in 1950. This block is also the site of about four smaller buildings that had not been constructed yet in 1950.

Between the 48th and 49th streets and northwest of the AVRR and bordering the Allegheny River are two- and three-story red brick manufacturing buildings that date to the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and house the operations of McConway & Torley, a railcar components manufacturer that moved to the site sometime between 1882 and 1890 (Photo 50). This area appears never to have had residential development. Prior to McConway & Torley's occupation, the site was used by several oil companies in the 1860s and 1870s.

The oldest buildings in the McConway & Torley complex (109 48th Street) may be a two-story brick office building at the north corner of the railroad right-of-way and 48th Street and an adjoining larger two-story brick building with pilasters along 48th Street. Both were built by 1890 and are among the oldest manufacturing buildings in the Lawrenceville Historic District. The larger building has a three-story brick addition with a sawtooth roof. Sanborn maps dating to between 1893 and 1950 depict it as containing a hammer shop, machine shop, and warehouse.

By 1893, most of the buildings that now compose the McConway & Torley complex had been built. Foremost may have been the enormous annealing, foundry, and machine shops building, extending hundreds of feet between the rail right-of-way and the Allegheny River. Also, by 1893, a sawtooth roof was built to cover the open area between the pilastered building north of the office and the annealing, foundry, and machine shops building. By 1927, the sawtooth roof covered an arcade with traveling crane and a tool room and storage area. A two-story, flat roofed brick building labeled as a core house on the 1893 Sanborn map stands two buildings northwest of the office building. By 1927, the building had a first floor used for storage and a second-story pattern shop. The storage area was a tool room by 1950. Just beyond it is a one- and two-story building that was used for annealing in 1893 and 1905. It contained coke ovens and annealing furnaces. It was labeled as an engine room on the 1927 and 1950 Sanborn maps. A one-story to three-story building for storing sand, brick, and other materials was built immediately northwest of the annealing building between 1905 and 1927, on what may have been the last piece of unused land on the McConway & Torley property.

The area between 49th and 51st streets northwest of the AVRR was once occupied by a large complex of ca. 1890-1920 buildings of the Crescent Steel Company (later Crescent Works of the Crucible Streel Company of America). The lone survivor of this complex is a small, two-story, brick office building (30 51st Street).

The block bounded by Harrison, 48th and 49th streets, and the AVRR contains two large buildings that were part of the H.K. Porter Locomotive Works (Photo 47). The older building, at the corner of 49th and Harrison streets (4925 Harrison Street), is a three-story brick building with pilasters that was constructed between 1893 and 1905. The 1905 Sanborn map labels it "new boiler shop," and it was still a boiler shop in 1950. The one-story building at 50th and Harrison streets had not yet been constructed in 1950. Other former H.K. Porter buildings stand between Hemlock Way and the AVRR (103 49th Street). This complex includes a two-and-a-half-story brick office building, constructed between 1893 and 1905, facing 49th Street less than 100 feet from Harrison Street (Photo 48). Immediately northeast of the office building are a two-story brick stock house and a two-story brick machine shop with pilasters. Both date to between 1893 and 1905. A three-story erecting shop and a two-story machine shop stand just northwest of the stock house and first-mentioned machine shop. The second machine shop was constructed by 1893, and the erecting shop was built by 1905. Immediately northwest of the office building stands a one-story and two-story blacksmith shop that was built between 1903 and 1905 and still used as a blacksmith shop in 1950. It is mostly clad in corrugated metal.

The Ninth Ward below Butler Street is the site of additional industrial buildings and structures between 40th and 48th streets. One industrial complex stands along 40th Street below Foster and Willow streets. The former Fort Duquesne Laundry (135 40th Street), is one story with a monitor roof and is clad in brick. It was constructed sometime between 1910 and 1923; a two-story brick addition was built on its southeast side sometime after 1950.

Buildings that remain from the Pittsburgh Rolls Corporation's Phoenix Roll Works complex stand on the northwest side of Willow Street between 40th and 41st streets (4001 Willow Street) and at the southeast corner of 41st and Willow streets (115 41st Street). They are in close proximity to a new apartment building on Willow Street (inventoried as 4107 Willow Street; new address not yet assigned to building under construction) that occupies part of the former Pittsburgh Rolls site (Photo 42). The former Pittsburgh Rolls office building occupies the southeast corner of 41st and Willow streets (115 41st Street), on a mostly residential block (Photo 43). The building is two stories with a rough-cut stone foundation, a double front door facing 41st Street with transom and sidelights, elaborate brick corbels, and rowlock lintels and sills. The block of Almond Way that adjoins Willow Street is the site of one-story and two-story concrete block buildings along with narrow brick rowhouses.

The west side of 43rd Street below Willow Street is home to the Ice House, a ca. 2000 rehabilitation of the former Consolidated Ice Company Factory No. 2 (100 43rd Street) (Photo 70). A datestone for the southernmost Ice House building, formerly an office and stable, indicates 1907 construction. The other buildings contained ice machines and freezing tanks. The complex appears intact with the exception of the demolition of a one-story wagon shed at some time after 1950. The Ice House buildings are unstyled and are one to three stories in height, of red brick construction, and have pilasters and corbels. A faded painted sign that says "No. 2" and "wagons on every street" can be seen on the northwest elevation.

Closer to the Allegheny River, the three-story red brick building of the National Robotics Engineering Center and a vacant former mill office building (both on tax parcel 80-N-6; no address assigned) stand along the southwest side of 43rd Street (Photo 69). The NREC building, a former machine shop, has brick corbels and pilasters. It was constructed ca. 1905 for the Epping-Carpenter Company (later the Worthington Pump & Machinery Company). In 1927 it was part of the Pittsburgh Piping and Equipment Company and contained an overhead crane. In the 1990s the northwest half of the complex was demolished and replaced with a new one-story and two-story addition clad in corrugated metal. The second building in the complex once housed the office of the pump manufacturing company. It is two stories and of brick construction. It was constructed ca. 1915 in an eclectic manner, has a parapet with a stone or concrete cap, a rounded two-story northeast corner, and a classically inspired front door surround. An 18-light transom is above the front entrance. Its façade window openings have smooth stone lintels and sills and are linked on the second story by a stone belt course.

On the opposite side of 43rd Street, a concrete company's property (1 43rd Street) contains two ca. 1950 concrete block buildings. To the southeast and across the AVRR tracks is a ca. 1935 two-story, concrete and brick former A&P Tea Company building (91 43rd Street), which now functions as offices. The offices are known as the Chocolate Factory, indicating a subsequent intermediate use. The office building is abutted by rowhouses on its southeast side.

Along the northwest side of Hatfield Street between 44th Street and Cotton Way stand a brick wall of about one story in height (a remnant of a demolished building associated with the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company) (Photo 45). A two-story building (4501 Hatfield Street) that is mostly clad in corrugated metal and has a monitor roof once contained the Heppenstall mill's open hearth department and a machine shop; it now houses Carnegie Robotics. Sections of brick wall that remain from demolished Heppenstall buildings also stand along Hatfield Street between 46th and 47th streets. Heppenstall operated until about 1980.

The Ninth Ward above Butler Street

This section of the Lawrenceville Historic District extends from 40th Street northeastward to Stanton Avenue and the northeastern boundary of Allegheny Cemetery, to the southeast of Butler Street. It is the most residential subsection of the neighborhood. This section is characterized by housing constructed for middle-class and working-class occupancy in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, albeit on relatively narrow urban lots, and a small number of associated properties such as churches, small-scale commercial buildings, and a library. The hospital and cemetery properties, along with segments of the Butler Street and Penn Avenue commercial districts, are located in this area as well and were addressed above.

Main Street, having developed between approximately 1870 and 1900, is the site of a number of dwellings that were built in the Italianate, Second Empire, and Queen Anne architectural styles (Photos 65-67). Its houses generally contain several rooms and were constructed as single-family homes. Nearly all are of brick construction. Fisk Street, parallel with Main Street and one block to the west, began to develop one to two decades later. The Queen Anne style may be the most common architectural influence on the street, although the style is shown more by details such as dormer placement and ornamentation than by elements of the Queen Anne form such as turrets. A smaller number of houses on Fisk Street show Colonial Revival influence. The best example may be a ca. 1900 dwelling at 248 Fisk Street, at the corner of Davison Street, with a mansard roof, Palladian-influenced front dormer, stone lintels and sills, brick dentils, stained glass, and a two-story side bay. The Lawrenceville branch of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, designed by the prominent architectural firm Alden & Harlow, is at 279 Fisk Street. The street's oldest dwellings are a freestanding center-entry Italianate brick house of the late 1850s at 241 Fisk Street, which originally faced Butler Street and was quarter-turned to allow for subdivision of its land, and a two-story brick Gothic Revival house at 294 Fisk Street, facing 40th Street and Arsenal Park. Fortieth Street, one block further west, has a number of houses in the Italianate and Queen Anne styles. A two-story, hipped-roof Greek Revival-influenced house stands at 257 40th Street. The houses on Main, Fisk, and 40th streets generally display good integrity. Many, however, appear to have had their original front porches replaced in or around the 1920s, and as a result have solid porch walls with concrete or stone caps despite their late Victorian era origins.

East of Main Street, the Ninth Ward above Butler Street has greater diversity in its housing stock. Larger middle-class dwellings stand on 44th, 45th, and Sherrod streets, scattered among more modest homes (Photos 61-64). Houses date to ca. 1850 in the area of Irish immigrant settlement around St. Mary's Church (340 46th Street), and they continued to be built into the 1940s or later. In addition to unstyled houses, Italianate, Second Empire, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Prairie, and Craftsman influences can be seen. The former St. Mary's Academy (part of 340 46th Street), built in 1853, is one of Lawrenceville's best examples of the Greek Revival style. Two blocks away on 44th Street above Davison Street, the former Holy Family Polish Roman Catholic Church and school complex (250 44th Street) of 1940 and later stands vacant awaiting rehabilitation as apartments.

The Davison Square Apartments (265 46th Street) are on 46th Street below (northwest of) Davison Street. Davison Square was built on the site of St. Margaret's Hospital, which was demolished ca. 1980. Although the hospital is gone, much of its wrought iron fence remains along 46th and Davison streets and the northwest property line.

The Tenth Ward

The Tenth Ward—north of Stanton Avenue to 55th Street—above Butler Street in the Lawrenceville Historic District is almost wholly residential, with homogeneity that is comparable to that of the part of the Sixth Ward between Liberty and Penn avenues. The area was laid out with most of its lots measuring 20 by 100 feet. Most dwellings are two or two-and-a-half stories in height and have side walkways for access to rear yards. Wood frame construction is more common than in other parts of the historic district, and this area also developed with more alley houses than other parts of the district (Photo 89). Most of the brick houses in this area stand along the streets that are parallel with Butler Street; brick alley houses exist but are uncommon. Comparison of building materials and house sizes suggests that the most valuable dwellings were constructed on Carnegie Street, the street immediately above (southeast of) Butler Street, with construction costs diminishing as streets climb the Tenth Ward hill: Carnegie Street is followed by Keystone Street, then Holmes Street, Duncan Street, and Wickliff Street (Photos 87, 94, 96-99, 101). Stanton Avenue, which divides this residential section of the historic district from Allegheny Cemetery, departs from this generalization, with a block of two-and-a-half-story and three-story brick houses between 52nd Street and McCandless Avenue serving as an entrance to Lawrenceville from the Stanton Heights neighborhood (Photos 102-103).

The two-story Greek Revival Mowry Mansion of 1830, at 5134 Carnegie Street, is the oldest building in this section of the historic district, and one of the oldest in Lawrenceville (Photo 104). The house, historically named "Echo," originally occupied a tract of 100 acres that extended uphill from the Allegheny River. In the early 1870s, when the property was subdivided into streets and building lots, its developers constructed a two-story side-gabled Italianate house at 414 52nd Street, apparently to encourage interest in lots in the subdivision. Some of the larger dwellings in this section of the historic district were built along Carnegie Street, particularly within a half-block of Stanton Avenue and between McCandless Avenue and 53rd Street. While most of the larger houses were built between about 1885 and 1895, a bungalow with Prairie Style influence was constructed at 5219 Carnegie Street in the 1920s. It stands out among neighboring rowhouses that were built about three decades earlier.

The landmark ca. 1908 St. Kieran's Roman Catholic Church (5300 Carnegie Street; now part of St. Matthew Parish) stands at 53rd and Carnegie streets (Photo 95). Its complex extends to 54th Street and includes the former rectory and convent (5324 and 5322 Carnegie Street, respectively, both ca. 1900); a parking lot occupies the former site of the parish school. A Protestant church, originally the First Primitive Methodist Episcopal Church) was built in the 1920s at 5227 Holmes Street, between 52nd Street and McCandless Avenue. This section of the historic district also contains a small number of former corner stores. The former McCleary Public School (1900) at McCandless Avenue and Holmes Street (5267 Holmes Street), features Classical Revival elements and was converted to residential use in 2017 (Photo 100).

Below (northwest of) Butler Street in the Tenth Ward, the historic district contains scattered houses on Berlin Way, Ruby Street, McCandless Avenue, and Harrison Street (Photo 88).

A group of four ca. 1900-1930 buildings that were formerly part of the Pittsburgh Spring & Steel Company and then the Spring Works of the Crucible Steel Company (1 McCandless Avenue) stands along McCandless Avenue between the AVRR right-of-way and the Allegheny River (Photo 86). Historic maps identify the Pittsburgh Spring & Steel Company as the occupant of the property in 1905, 1927, and 1937, and Crucible Steel as the occupant in 1950. Barber Spring, a manufacturer of railroad car springs, presently occupies the complex. The westernmost building, close to the river bank, is a two-story red brick office building that was constructed between 1927 and 1937. A one-story building that historic Sanborn maps identify as a bumper shop stands near the intersection of McCandless Avenue and the rail right-of-way. It was built in the mid-1920s, is clad in corrugated metal, and has a monitor roof. The 1927 and 1950 Sanborn maps show that it housed an overhead crane. A large one-story and two-story building, identified as "main building" on historic Sanborn maps, extends from the rail right-of-way almost to the bank of the river. It was built between 1893 and 1905. Sanborn maps indicate that it contains several furnaces and a concrete shipping platform. Adjoining to the southwest is a one-story and two-story building that is clad in corrugated metal and has a monitor roof. It was constructed between 1893 and 1905, and historically contained a boiler house, an engine and dynamo room, a machine shop, and a blacksmith shop. Two storage buildings and three tank structures that are depicted on the 1950 Sanborn map have been removed.

The Frank Kneeland Machine Company Department of the United Engineering and Foundry Company was responsible for the construction of a group of buildings (50 55th Street) between the continuations of 54th and 55th streets, between the AVRR right of way and the Allegheny River (Photo 55). Most of the buildings that stand on the site date to the late nineteenth or early twentieth century. One of the most prominent buildings stands at the southernmost corner of the site, with its main elevation parallel with the AVRR right-of way. The ca. 1893-1905 building, originally an erecting shop, is three stories, of steel truss construction, and clad in brick with pilasters and corbels. Immediately to its east is a ca. 1893-1905, two-story red brick building with pilasters and corbels, which was historically used as a machine shop, with a pattern shop and pattern storage on the second floor. A one-story and two-story former foundry building stands immediately northwest. Sanborn maps indicate that it was built between 1893 and 1905, contained melting furnaces and coke ovens, and was converted to a storage building between 1927 and 1950. It is clad in corrugated metal. A two-story building that is clad in corrugated metal is immediately to the southwest. It post-dates the 1950 Sanborn map. A one-story to three-story building that stands just northwest of the erecting shop is labeled "new shop" on the 1950

Sanborn map. Northwest of the "new shop" are a collection of smaller buildings: a one-story blacksmith shop and approximately three buildings that postdate the 1950 Sanborn map. A two-story brick building that was built as offices stands near the southwest property line. It dates to between 1905 and 1927. A one-story brick building that postdates the 1950 Sanborn map stands between the office building and the river bank. A three-story brick building is near the east corner of the property. The building's southern side is irregularly shaped to allow for a rail siding that once passed between it and the machine shop. The building was constructed between 1893 and 1905 and was used for pattern storage through at least 1950. A one-story engine room, also built between 1893 and 1905, extends from the northwest elevation. A coal and coke bin with an attached shed formerly extended from the engine room and has been removed.

Integrity

The Lawrenceville Historic District, despite alterations to some historic resources and the loss of others, retains sufficient integrity to convey its historic significance as a residential, commercial, and industrial neighborhood with resources dating to most of the nineteenth century and the first half of the twentieth century. The district also contains historic landscapes in its cemeteries and parks, and support buildings such as schools, churches, clubs, and corner stores. Of the district's 5217 resources, 3232 (62%) are contributing and 1985 (38%) are non-contributing. Non-contributing resources are spread throughout the district in a random pattern and thus do not affect the cohesiveness of the district as a whole.

Location: The Lawrenceville Historic District retains its historic location. The historic district has not been moved, and there is no record of the district's individual contributing buildings having been moved, with the exception of individual dwellings on Fisk Street and Locarna Way that were turned and moved, respectively, in association with subdivision and development. While the sheer size of the district suggests the possibility that other buildings or structures have been moved, there is no reason to suspect that many were relocated. The district's historic buildings, structures, objects, and sites—the oldest dating to nearly two centuries ago—have integrity of location.

Design: The Lawrenceville Historic District, taken as a whole, retains its historic design. The majority of the district's residential, commercial, and industrial resources generally maintain their original appearances. Moreover, the spatial relationships, organization, form, height, exterior cladding, and fenestration of buildings and building types, and the placement, organization, and materials of structures (including historic railroad tracks, walls, streets, and alleys) recalls Lawrenceville during its period of significance.

The preservation of Lawrenceville's residential exteriors may be most noticeable on Main, Fisk, and 40th streets. Houses with substantially original exteriors can be found on the majority of the residential streets in the neighborhood, including 34th and 36th through 48th streets, Home, Plummer, Hatfield, 43½, Charlotte, Davison, Bessemer, Sherrod, Carnegie, and Keystone streets, and Penn and Stanton avenues. Most of those streets have been the site of little demolition, with the result being preservation of historic spatial relationships and the organization of streetscape and block components.

Most residential streets in the historic district contain houses that have been altered by the installation of replacement windows and glass block basement windows, the application of aluminum, vinyl, and other newer siding materials to wood frame (and less commonly brick) houses, and the replacement or covering of some original front steps with concrete slabs to create small porches. Many of these alterations appear to have been a result of unprecedented millworker prosperity during the third quarter of the twentieth century. They are distributed fairly evenly through the residential areas of the historic district.

More recent alterations, which are less numerous, are constructing additional living space at the third story level and painting exterior masonry. In the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries, however, a smaller number of property owners in the historic district have restored houses by removing newer siding materials to expose wood siding, restoring original fenestration, and removing paint from brick and stone.

Residential Lawrenceville contains a comparatively small number of resources (318 of 5217) that were built after the end of the period of significance. Rather than being concentrated in one area, they are scattered through the historic district: a split-level house on Duncan Street, four ca. 1970 party wall houses on Holmes Street, the 24 houses of the 1950s Arsenal Place subdivision, a house on Howley Street that appears to date to the 1960s, houses on and near Hatfield Street dating to the first decade of the twenty-first century, and other townhouse developments. Some recent residential construction, with front-loaded garages and incompatible cladding materials, does not complement the historic fabric of the neighborhood or the traditional relationship of buildings to one another. These dwellings have been built on streets that include Charlotte, 38th, 43rd, 45th, 47th, and Hatfield. Nearly all of the new construction has taken place on parcels that had been vacant for decades, rather than in association with teardowns.

Most buildings in the commercial sections of the historic district retain their historic design, both in the façades of individual buildings and in the spatial relationships of the buildings to each other and adjacent residential areas. Since the 1990s, commercial buildings along Butler Street and to a lesser extent Penn Avenue have, as a whole, become truer to their historic appearances with the reopening of infilled storefronts and the removal of inappropriate cladding such as metal panels that had been installed in or around the 1970s. During the same period, a handful of commercial buildings on Butler Street in the historic district were demolished, extending across all three wards.

On Butler Street, demand for both rental and owner-occupied housing has resulted in the construction of townhouses, condominiums, and apartments between 34th and 39th streets. Most of the new buildings stand side-by-side with restored commercial buildings dating to the late nineteenth century. Although the façade cladding and fenestration of the new buildings differs from that of their historic neighbors, the lack of front and side setbacks and the height of the new buildings are similar to the older buildings. Other modern properties along Butler Street include two convenience stores, a fast food restaurant, and two banks. Despite intrusions, Butler Street's historic buildings are generally well preserved, and far outnumber the street's recently constructed buildings.

Penn Avenue is the site of historic buildings that retain integrity, and some non-contributing properties. The latter include a number of modern townhouses between 34th and 38th streets; Children's Hospital, built between 44th and 45th streets in the first decade of this century; a convenience store and a ca. 1990 office building at 42nd Street; and a dialysis clinic and its parking lot. The former Episcopal Church Home (now Canterbury Place) stands at the northeast corner of Penn Avenue and 40th Street, extending along Penn to Fisk Street. The complex's original 1890s section, four stories of red brick with rough-cut stone trim and round-arched window openings, is dwarfed by at least two additions that were built later in the twentieth century. A modern firehouse stands at the southwest corner of 40th Street and Penn Avenue. One-story wholesale buildings and a laundromat stand on the 3800 block of Penn, among contributing buildings of the nineteenth century. A few blocks away, a modern electrical substation occupies a block bounded by Liberty Avenue, 37th and 38th streets, and Cabinet Way.

Penn Avenue, somewhat similar to Butler Street, maintains its historic appearance as a primarily commercial thoroughfare with a scattering of dwellings that date to the historic district's period of significance. Despite the introduction of some modern properties to its streetscapes, Penn Avenue clearly shows its historic design as the site of one- to four-story commercial buildings with some single-family homes, and it retains its historic function as a commercial strip serving residential sections of Lawrenceville and Bloomfield. Within the historic district, Penn Avenue shares scale, typical fenestration, and masonry cladding of buildings with the adjoining residential areas.

The Lawrenceville Historic District's historic manufacturing buildings generally retain their historic design in their exteriors and in the ways in which they relate to each other, adjacent manufacturing buildings, and other buildings in the district. The district's best concentration of manufacturing resources that retain their historic design is probably the adjoining McConway & Torley and former H.K. Porter locomotive works properties between 48th and 50th streets, in part because each of the historic industrial complexes strengthens the other through spatial relationships, adjoining layouts, and the recurring use of red brick, pilasters, and two- and three-story construction. The buildings also appear to have experienced relatively few alterations, and the design of the buildings to occupy very nearly all available land is a hallmark of manufacturing properties built in the nineteenth century and the first few decades of the twentieth century.

The Iron City Brewery complex, with about a dozen red brick buildings built between shortly after the Civil War and the first decades of the twentieth century, is another good example of industrial design responding to needs. By the early 1910s, the brewery complex contained nearly all of the historic buildings that stand there today. A few building uses changed over time, such as a ca. 1910 four-story stable later being repurposed for newer uses. At 54th Street and the AVRR, the Frank Kneeland Machine Company (later the United Engineering and Foundry Company) arranged its approximately seven buildings to suit its needs as the operator of a foundry and machine shop; the property is now occupied by McKamish, a mechanical contracting and metal fabricating company. In the 3500 block of Smallman Street, the four extant former manufacturing buildings that were once part of Crucible Steel and American Steel Foundries have lost much of their context with the demolition of the primary buildings with which they were associated. However, the buildings' designs ensure that they are recognizable as former mill components to the hundreds of motorists and bicyclists who pass by every day on heavily traveled Smallman Street. Around the corner at the foot of 36th Street, the Pittsburgh Foundry and Machine Company has apparently occupied the same building during its 116 years of operation. The building's design, with simple side-gabled roof and corrugated metal cladding, indicates that it has an industrial use.

Setting: The Lawrenceville Historic District retains the setting that it had during the period of significance. The Lawrenceville neighborhood sits near the lower end of the Allegheny River valley, bounded by the river and several city neighborhoods. Communities to the north, primarily parts of Millvale, Troy Hill, and Reserve, can be seen from much of the historic district. The southern parts of the district consist of some streets of moderate slope above (southeast of) Butler Street, and the rolling topography of Allegheny and St. Mary's cemeteries. Arsenal Park and Leslie Park are also within the historic district, the latter sharing a border with Allegheny Cemetery.

The street grid of Lawrenceville has been relatively unchanged since the completion of subdivision in the neighborhood in the nineteenth century or early twentieth century. A small residential section of the Ninth Ward northwest of Hatfield Street became part of the Heppenstall mill property as part of that mill's expansion during the second quarter of the twentieth century. A smaller area northwest of Willow Street was vacated for industrial expansion around that time or earlier. The street grids of adjacent neighborhoods also generally date to the nineteenth century, with the exception of Stanton Heights, part of which was laid out in the twentieth century. Nearly all of the public streets in the Lawrenceville Historic District are paved in asphalt, although a few streets and alleys, including Bessemer and Bruce streets and parts of Eden and Cotton ways, below Butler Street, are still paved in brick. Kellar Street is still paved in Belgian block. Perhaps one-fifth of the sidewalks in residential Lawrenceville are still brick.

In its residential areas, Lawrenceville has historically had more open space in the Ninth Ward above (southeast of) Butler Street. That section of the historic district has more detached houses and fewer alley houses than other areas.

With the exception of the two cemeteries and Arsenal Park, Lawrenceville has historically had little vegetation. In recent years, a street tree planting program has increased the number of trees within the historic district.

Materials: The majority of the residential, commercial, and industrial buildings within the Lawrenceville Historic District are clad in the materials with which they were built.

Among the historic district's brick houses and commercial buildings, a small minority have been covered with stone veneer, aluminum siding, vinyl siding, or a newer brick veneer. The large majority still have their original brick cladding without a newer material having been applied.

A large majority of the historic district's wood frame houses are clad in aluminum siding, vinyl siding, or another cladding material such as asphalt siding or cement shingles. As noted above, in recent years property owners have removed newer cladding from a small number of wood frame houses in the district, exposing and restoring original wood siding. At least two brick houses in the district, both on 45th Street, have had stone veneer and aluminum siding removed.

Commercial buildings within the historic district, overall, have fared well during Lawrenceville's period of revitalization and reinvestment, during approximately the last 20 years. Nearly all of the commercial buildings are of brick construction, which does not lend itself to façade alterations as easily as wood frame construction. Particularly on Butler Street in the Sixth Ward, commercial property owners have taken on projects such as removing paint from masonry, thereby exposing original materials, and reopening bricked-in façade windows, removing façade materials that were not originally present. The retention and re-exposure of original brick, rather than its replacement with new materials, prevents the creation of "a recent structure fabricated to look historic," as referenced in National Register of Historic Places Bulletin (NRB 15).

The manufacturing buildings within the historic district generally retain their historic exterior materials. Red brick and corrugated metal cladding and roofing are heavily represented. Also seen, although much less frequently, are concrete block, glass block, steel beams, and limestone. The latter material was used in the "Pittsburgh Crushed Steel Co." sign, in the datestone for the Consolidated Ice Company, and in the Iron City Brewery complex, possibly among other locations.

Workmanship: Nearly all of the buildings in the Lawrenceville Historic District display or imply a quality of workmanship that is typical of permanent structures constructed in the settled United States in the nineteenth century and the first half of the twentieth century. A city with the size and relative wealth of Pittsburgh was home to individuals, families, businesses, and congregations that were capable of contracting with some of the best builders and craftsmen available. Particularly in and after the 1890s, contracting firms that were regionally prominent, rather than locally known, constructed some of the historic district's largest and most significant buildings. Those buildings included St. Augustine, St. John the Baptist, and St. Kieran Roman Catholic churches, the Pennsylvania National Bank at Butler Street and Penn Avenue, the Metropolitan National Bank (now PNC) at 41st and Butler streets, the Allegheny Valley Bank in the 5100 block of Butler Street, and Arsenal School on Butler Street between 39th and 40th streets. More typical buildings, such as the houses and commercial buildings that line the historic district's streets and the manufacturing buildings along the AVRR tracks and near the Allegheny River, were also built well and have held up well. In the case of the district's industrial buildings, it can be presumed that the manufacturers who commissioned them expected that they would withstand years of rough use, with the heat, vibrations, moving parts, and various mishaps associated with manufacturing processes.

Not only regionally known contractors, but builders who did most of their work in the neighborhoods where they lived were well-regarded. In 1890, for example, the book Industries and Wealth of Pittsburgh and Environs reported that William Zahniser, who constructed scores of houses and other buildings in Lawrenceville, had become a contractor after serving "a long apprenticeship...His skill and industry soon became known and the business flourished apace." Zahniser's reputation as a builder eventually led to his election to Pittsburgh City Council and his service as the president of the Metropolitan National Bank.

The buildings in the historic district that are less likely to make clear the workmanship with which they were build are the wood frame houses that are clad with various twentieth century sidings. The more recent siding materials seem to obscure the houses' structural systems that are at least implied by components such as sills and corner boards, and also are usually associated with the removal of historic ornamentation on which carpenters and perhaps other craftsmen labored. A majority (64.4%) of Lawrenceville's buildings are contain brick wall cladding, and about 31% of buildings are frame buildings that have been re-clad in materials other than wood. Only 47 or (1%) of buildings contain wood or wood shingle cladding.

Feeling: The Lawrenceville Historic District retains the feeling of an historic American city neighborhood with well-developed residential, commercial, and industrial areas. The placement of streets and rail lines and groupings of buildings of different types, together with the presence of historic building forms and materials, setting, design, and workmanship, makes clear that the neighborhood developed and matured during an earlier era in the history of the United States and Pittsburgh.

Association: The Lawrenceville Historic District is intact enough to convey the community's history as a working-class and middle-class city neighborhood with active commercial districts and a significant industrial history. The historic district retains the dwellings in which its working-class and middle-class residents lived, including iron and steel mill workers' homes, residences of members of the various ethnic groups who clustered there, Butler Street shopkeepers' homes, and in some examples, the homes of the community's earliest families, who built houses in and before the fourth decade of the nineteenth century. The historic district also retains commercial strips along Butler Street and Penn Avenue, with the oldest contributing commercial properties on Butler Street dating to the 1830s and 1840s. Lawrenceville also retains substantially intact manufacturing buildings dating to the late nineteenth century, which are among the older mill buildings in the city of Pittsburgh.

Because the Lawrenceville Historic District substantially retains its historic location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, the district possesses the integrity that is required for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Lawrenceville Historic District is significant under National Register Criterion A in the areas of Commerce and Industry and under Criterion C for its exemplary array of Victorian and post-Victorian architectural design as adapted to the circumstances of a predominantly working-class community. The period of significance of the historic district extends from 1814 to 1950. 1814 is the date of the founding of the original village of Lawrenceville around the Allegheny Arsenal, also established in that year, all on land purchased by William Barclay Foster. By 1950, the neighborhood had largely been built out, and Lawrenceville's industrial production had reached its peak. The historic district includes 22 blocks of Butler Street, the neighborhood's primary commercial corridor; the site of the Civil War-era Allegheny Arsenal, part of which is now a public park, and remaining resources associated with this complex; industrial and institutional resources that provided employment and medical and educational services to the community in the 19th and 20th centuries; churches; two cemeteries, including Allegheny Cemetery, previously listed individually on the National Register; and many blocks of residential resources representing a range of architectural styles as expressed in, predominantly, working-class housing from the early 19th to the mid-20th centuries.

The historical development of Lawrenceville took place in a number of phases. The first phase began with the founding of the original town of Lawrenceville in 1814 and extends to the construction of the railroad in 1850. The second phase, from 1850-1868, reflects the period when improved transportation access promoted the development of manufacturing, industry, and commerce, and corresponding population growth; this period also encompasses the Civil War, when the Allegheny Arsenal was at its most active. In 1868, Lawrenceville was annexed to the City of Pittsburgh. The years from 1868 to 1890 are the third phase of Lawrenceville's historical development and represent its peak of industrial and commercial activity. In its fourth phase, from 1890 to 1950, the residential areas of the neighborhood experienced demographic transitions due to an influx of immigrants, mainly from eastern Europe, who established new religious and cultural institutions amid their residences. Subsequent to 1950, Lawrenceville experienced decline common to many urban neighborhoods nationwide, followed by the beginnings of a reversal in the early 21st century.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

History: 1814-1850

Lawrenceville was built on the site of Shannopin's Town, a Delaware Native American village established as early as 1730 around the site where a Native American trail from Harrisburg crossed the Allegheny River between about 27th and 30th Streets.[1] In the 1750s, the Lenape migrated westward to Ohio under pressure from Iroquois and British settlers, farmers, and fur traders. Joseph Conrad Winebiddle started the first industry in the area, a tannery, in 1771.[2]

The town of Lawrenceville was founded in 1814 by William Barclay Foster (1779-1855), a prosperous merchant, Pennsylvania state legislator, and father of composer Stephen Foster. The Foster family resided at Penn Avenue (then a turnpike that ran from Pittsburgh to Greensburg) and Denny Street in a home known as the "White Cottage," surrounded by barns, stables, a smokehouse, and a summer kitchen. Stephen Foster was born here in 1826. At around the same time, William Foster's business affairs foundered, and the family lost this home through foreclosure. The White Cottage was demolished by 1864, when the present brick Second Empire house was constructed on the property for iron manufacturer Andrew Kloman, an early partner of Andrew Carnegie. A Pennsylvania Historical Marker presently marks the Foster home site.

On April 5, 1814, William Foster purchased 121 acres from the Allegheny River to the present Woolslayer Way, immediately south of Penn Avenue, and between the current 38th and 41st streets, for $35,000. On April 29, for $12,000, Foster re-sold 30 acres of this land to the United States government, which established the Allegheny Arsenal campus between 39th and 40th streets and between the bank of the Allegheny River and present Penn Avenue. The remainder of his property Foster subdivided into the town of Lawrenceville, which he named for Captain James Lawrence, famed for his last words "Don't give up the ship!" during the War of 1812. Lawrenceville flanked the Arsenal on the Arsenal's southwest and northwest sides, with house lots platted on 39th Street, both sides of 38th Street. 40th Street, and both sides of 41st Street. Butler Street cut through the Arsenal and the town.

As an ordnance manufacturing site, the Allegheny Arsenal was significant to the United States' war and defense capabilities. The Arsenal supplied ammunition, small arms, and other military supplies for frontier defense, the Mexican War (1846-1848), the Civil War, and other conflicts of the 19th century. It was established by the U.S. Army Ordnance Department in 1814, the location chosen for its proximity to river transportation and to the iron-producing facilities of Pittsburgh. Benjamin Latrobe laid out the Arsenal's 30-acre grounds and designed its dozen core neo-Classical buildings, which were constructed between 1814-1820 at a cost of $300,000. Below Butler Street were located officers' quarters, barracks for 200 soldiers, warehouses, and various shops and arms magazines. Above Butler Street, the Arsenal contained stables, powder magazines, and cartridge manufacturing buildings. (Figures 1-9) On June 3, 1825, General Lafayette visited the Arsenal for breakfast and a tour of the works.

Production at the Arsenal peaked during the Civil War, but it employed 300-400 people at other times. These were mostly English and Scotch-Irish residents of Lawrenceville and adjacent areas, including blacksmiths, tinners, painters, carpenters, masons, and other laborers.[3] A stone wall seen today along 39th and 40th streets and Penn Avenue is original to the Arsenal; a further segment of the original Arsenal wall exists parallel to the railroad tracks near the Allegheny River. The only other pre-Civil War Arsenal structures to survive are the L-shaped powder magazine tucked into the hillside of Arsenal Park (now a maintenance shed for the park) and a nearby brick structure incorporated into the Allegheny County Clack Health Center (former U.S. Marine Hospital) complex at the top of the hill.

Other extant resources from this period in the district's development are representative of pre-urban estates, small village settlements, rural cemeteries, and nascent businesses dependent on the Arsenal employees who resided in Lawrenceville and travelers along the major thoroughfares of Penn Avenue and Butler Street.

Lawrenceville's original residential neighborhood from 38th Street to 41st Street predominantly served the workers of the Arsenal. Simple wood frame houses were typical of this period. These were generally built to modest proportions, with low ceilings, sometimes less than eight feet in height, often two rooms per floor, and only partial basements, with crawlspaces under rear rooms. Of two frame houses at 157 and 159 41st St., at least the former appears to date to the 1820s, and if so, is the oldest residence in Lawrenceville. (Figure 10) There are other modest houses along 38th, 39th, and 41st streets that date to the 1830s and 1840s, mixed in with later examples. The ca. 1830 house at 238 39th St. was the home of John O'Brien, who helped build the Arsenal. Three churches were said to exist in Lawrenceville by 1841: Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Methodist.[4] Their buildings no longer stand.

In 1834, Lawrenceville was incorporated as a borough. Also in the 1830s, the village of Hatfield was laid out by George Bayard on part of his estate north of Butler Street between 48th and 49th streets (the portion of Bayard's estate that contained his home later became part of Allegheny Cemetery). Hatfield grew steadily through the 1850s, with many of its male residents employed in the stone yards that began operation after the establishment of Allegheny and St. Mary's cemeteries in the 1840s. Hatfield's early subdivision meant it developed three to four decades older than adjacent blocks. Hatfield lost its distinctive identity in the 1860s as Lawrenceville expanded northeastward to surround it.[5] Although discontinuous, the original plat of Lawrenceville and the village of Hatfield are the oldest areas in the community; in both can be found modest houses that pre-date 1850, mixed in among later dwellings.

Two cemeteries—Allegheny Cemetery and St. Mary's Catholic Cemetery—were established, adjacent to one another, northeast of 45th Street between Butler Street and Penn Avenue in the 1840s. Of these, Allegheny Cemetery (NRHP 1980) is by far the larger and more significant. Chronologically the sixth rural cemetery in the United States and the first west of the Allegheny mountains, Allegheny Cemetery was, at the time of its establishment in 1844, truly remote from the city of Pittsburgh, which was concentrated at the Point. Its original acreage was acquired from the summer retreat of the wealthy Bayard family. Allegheny Cemetery is characterized by its picturesque landscape including ponds, fountains, mature trees and other exotic and native plantings, and curvilinear paths that follow the contours of the hillside site. Interments were open to all religious denominations; the first occurred in 1845. In 1848, the cemetery gained its Gothic Revival gatehouse designed by John Chislett, one of Pittsburgh's best-known architects of the mid-19th century. Chislett was also appointed the first superintendent of the cemetery, charged with laying out its grounds and designing its landscape. Allegheny Cemetery continued to add land (to its present size of 267 acres), buildings, and the graves, tombs, and mausoleums over subsequent decades to the present.

St. Mary's Cemetery, incorporated in 1849, was also designed in the picturesque mode of a rural cemetery, but being much smaller at 44 acres, it is less elaborate. It answered a need for a Catholic burial ground, larger than the already-crowded church yards associated with the city's oldest Catholic parishes, to accommodate the growing Catholic community east of downtown Pittsburgh. Important interments include those of Catholic bishops; Pittsburgh mayors, State Supreme Court justices, and other public servants; prominent businesspersons; and veterans.

Nearby, on and around 45th and 46th streets above Davison Street, exist a few pre-1850 houses of an Irish immigrant community that developed adjoining St. Mary's parish in the early-to-mid 19th century. Ireland's depression of 1847 and subsequent famine caused many Irish to immigrate to the United States. Of those early Irish immigrants to Pittsburgh, those who could moved to "suburban" Lawrenceville from the more urbanized areas of downtown, the Strip, and the Hill District.

The Borough of Lawrenceville was expanded in 1847 and again in 1852, bringing in the area between 39th and 41st Streets as far south as Woolslayer Way. Outside of the nodes of settlement were spacious Federal and Greek Revival Style estate houses constructed on large parcels of land ranging from a city block (186 42nd Street, a pre-1850 mansion, now drastically altered) to 100 acres (the well-preserved Mowry mansion, constructed in 1830 at 5134 Carnegie Street). By 1850, the population of Lawrenceville was over 1700—a large increase from the 200 recorded in 1828—and included many Germans as well as English and Irish.

Transportation during this period was by river or by road. Butler Street was an important regional transportation route in the pre-railroad era, utilized by farmers and merchants bringing their goods to market in Pittsburgh and Lawrenceville. Its earliest commercial development occurred in approximately the same area as the community's original plat between 38th and 41st

Streets, with scattered grocers, bakers, butchers, and boot and shoemakers extending about a block further in both directions. Several hotels and inns provided meals, taverns, and overnight accommodations to farmers, merchants, and their horses traveling on the Butler Road and were an integral component of local commerce. Still standing is a ca. 1836 building at 4025-4029 Butler St. (corner of 41st St.) which was run as a hotel by the Naser family beginning in 1846.[6]

Butler Street was also home to artisans such as blacksmiths, saddlers, and tinners, some of whom were employed at the Arsenal while others may have worked for themselves out of their home premises. The population of Arsenal workers living on 38th through 41st streets supported the businesses on Butler Street. For one year in around 1818, a hackney coach ran between Pittsburgh and John Mean's Tavern at Penn Avenue and Butler Street (known as "the forks of the road"). After this ceased, public transportation to Lawrenceville did not resume until the 1840s, when innkeeper John Naser began a horse-drawn omnibus service on the same line. This operated until 1853.

During the first half of the nineteenth century, before Pittsburgh received railroad service and before Lawrenceville became an important part of the area's iron and steel manufacturing activity, industry was scattered and small-scale. In about 1818 the Wainwright family established the Winterton Brewery, which brewed ales and porters at what is now the foot of 36th Street. Decades later, the business was merged into the Pittsburgh Brewing Company. By the 1830s, John Kingan manufactured bricks along the Allegheny River, a rope walk operated near the river in the village of Hatfield in the 1840s, and stone monument carvers sprang up near the cemeteries. R.E. McGowan's 1852 map depicts Morrison & Wightman's saw mill near the foot of 47th Street. No remnants of these early manufacturing enterprises are known to exist today.

During the second phase of Lawrenceville's historical development, the infrastructure and industry that would guide the district's future were put into place.

The first of these was transportation. The Allegheny Valley Railroad (AVRR) was built along the banks of the Allegheny River in 1850, and the Pennsylvania Railroad close to Liberty Avenue at around the same time. The AVRR rail yard, located between 43rd and 47th Streets, was particularly important to attracting new residents to the area below Butler Street and northeast of the original town of Lawrenceville; the completion of the AVRR line to Kittanning in 1856 further contributed to the community's expansion.[7] In 1859, a horsecar line operated by the Citizens' Passenger Railway was extended from downtown Pittsburgh to Lawrenceville, ending at the entrance to Allegheny Cemetery. This service succeeded the earlier one run by John Naser and was, in turn, replaced with a street railway.

During the Civil War, employment at the Arsenal increased to about 1200, many of them girls and women who sought income making rifle cartridges at the Arsenal while the male members of their families were away at war. On September 17, 1862, a spark ignited the Arsenal's frame munitions laboratory and it exploded, resulting in the largest civilian disaster of the Civil War. Seventy-eight were killed. A monument was later erected in their honor in Allegheny Cemetery.

At the end of the Civil War, Lawrenceville stood poised for rapid industrialization. Between 1865 and the Panic of 1873, the Pittsburgh area experienced strong economic growth. The Arsenal had already established Lawrenceville's suitability for industrial activity, and the arrival of rail and horse-drawn transportation now increased the desirability of the borough's flat riverbanks for mills and factories and of its hillsides for housing.

An early mill complex in Lawrenceville, the precursor of the H. K. Porter Locomotive Works, opened in 1866 on Harrison Street between 49th and 50th streets. Several brick structures associated with this complex still stand and have been adapted to other uses. A number of oil refineries, including the precursor to Standard Oil, also began operating along the banks of the Allegheny River from 39th Street northward during the 1860s. The Iron City Brewery moved from the site of its founding in the Strip District to its present home on Liberty Avenue in 1866 or 1867. The new site adjoined the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad, essential for shipping. The facility grew incrementally through 1910 or later and operated until the first years of the twenty-first century, employing hundreds in one of the country's longest-lived regional breweries.

Perhaps the most powerful engine of Lawrenceville's industrial boom during this period was the establishment of iron mills and the Keystone Bridge Company by Andrew Carnegie. During the Civil War, Carnegie formed a partnership with Thomas Miller, Henry Phipps, and Andrew Kloman which took over Miller's Atlas Iron Works, then located in the Strip District between 27th and 29th Streets. In 1865, the partnership consolidated with Cyclops Iron Works, located at 33rd Street in Lawrenceville, forming the Union Iron Mills. This enterprise laid the foundation for Carnegie's founding of the United States Steel Company in 1901.[8] Carnegie's expertise in iron manufacturing also led him to found the Keystone Bridge Company in 1865. The company held the patent for wrought iron bridges and supplied iron columns for buildings. The company was absorbed into the American Bridge Company in 1900.

With growth of industry and population, Lawrenceville also expanded geographically. Commercial buildings were erected during the pre- and post-Civil War years along Butler Street on both sides of the Arsenal property: between 36th and 38th streets to the south and between Almond Way and 44th Street to the north. The Round Corner Hotel, under construction in 1862 at the corner of 38th and Butler streets, was struck by debris from the Arsenal explosion. With an additional story added by Eli Waidler in the 1880s, the Round Corner demonstrates the continued importance of travel and commerce on the Butler Road well into the late 19th century.

In 1865, St. Francis Hospital was founded in a frame house on 37th Street. Construction of a large hospital complex between 44th and 45th streets began in the 1870s and continued through the 1960s. St. Francis Hospital specialized in industrial medicine and had a ward for injured Carnegie Steel employees.[9] St. Francis was demolished in 2008 when Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh relocated from Oakland to new buildings on the St. Francis site in Lawrenceville.

Lawrenceville's post-Civil War boom was accompanied by a rise in property values and demand for housing, both by workers and by middle-class families headed by small business owners, managers, and others of similar socio-economic status. Strong demand encouraged the construction of multiple houses on some parcels, resulting in a proliferation of alley houses in the district.[10] This dense development of, often, small rowhouses co-existed during this period with the summer mansions and country estate houses constructed before the Civil War, when Lawrenceville had a more suburban character. Throughout the southwestern part of the neighborhood, Greek Revival, Gothic Revival, and early Italianate houses from this transitional period can be found. Examples include the ca. 1855 Greek Revival rowhouse at 190 36th Street; the restored ca. 1850 frame Greek Revival house at 43rd and Foster Streets; Gothic Revival houses on 38th Street near Penn Avenue and at 294 Fisk Street; and the ca. 1858 Italianate house on Fisk Street below Davison.

Irish immigrants continued to arrive in Lawrenceville so that, in 1853, the Catholic Diocese established St. Mary's parish adjacent to St. Mary's Cemetery; prior to this, Lawrenceville's Irish Catholics had had to travel to St. Patrick's in the Strip District or to St. Joseph's in Sharpsburg to worship. St. Mary's chapel, which also originally functioned as the parish's schoolhouse (and so is also known as the Academy building), was dedicated in 1854 on 46th Street above Davison Street. This was expanded in 1863, and the parish would continue to grow with the Irish community: a convent (now demolished) was completed in 1867, a new church in 1874, and a school in 1881.

In 1868, the Allegheny Cemetery gatehouse was enlarged by the addition of a building, designed by Henry Barr of the local firm Barr and Moser, containing a chapel and offices. In the same year, operations at the Allegheny Arsenal ceased, and the Borough of Lawrenceville was annexed to Pittsburgh.

History: 1868-1890

The decades between annexation and the end of the 19th century were eventful and prosperous as Lawrenceville continued to urbanize and expand its industry, commerce, population, and boundaries. In 1871, the Ewalt covered bridge was constructed at 43rd St, connecting Lawrenceville across the Allegheny River to Millvale. In 1877, the AVRR gained a right-of-way through the Arsenal grounds.

More broadly, the Bessemer process, patented in 1856 in England, transformed the metals manufacturing industry in the post-Civil War United States by decreasing the cost of steel production even as it increased efficiency. Demand for steel boomed, and Andrew Carnegie invested in the technology, understanding its potential to enhance his Keystone Bridge and Union Iron works.

In the wake of these developments, both the iron and steel industries intensified along the banks of the Allegheny River after the Civil War. In fact, Lawrenceville's riverfront itself expanded via the infilling of the back channel of the Allegheny between approximately 35th and 40th streets and McCullough's Island (later called Wainwright's Island). The Crucible Steel Works and the rail yards of the Pittsburgh Junction Railroad, established in 1881, located there.

By 1872, substantial parts of Lawrenceville's Allegheny River frontage were occupied by iron manufacturers, a steel mill, numerous oil refineries, a saw mill, a brewery, coal yards, and the yards of the Allegheny Valley Railroad (AVRR). The Historic District contained three components of Andrew Carnegie's expanding manufacturing empire: Carnegie, Kloman & Company's Upper Union Mills at 33rd and 34th streets; their Lucy Furnaces 1 and 2 between 51st and 52nd streets; and the Keystone Bridge Company, which adjoined the Lucy Furnaces just across the AVRR tracks. The Lucy furnaces were probably the most famous manufacturing site in the Lawrenceville Historic District. Carnegie and his associates built Lucy Furnace No. 1 in 1871-72, and Lucy No. 2 began operation in 1877. (Figures 11-13) Lucy's workers, on 12-hour shifts, broke an ironmaking record when they turned out 100 tons in a single day in 1874. The furnaces peaked at 118,000 tons of iron in 1897, and made over $1 million annual profit around that time, in 19th century dollars. Lucy's record-setting pig iron production continued until 1929, even after steel supplanted iron for most uses. Lucy Furnaces 1 and 2 ended operations in 1929 and 1930, respectively. The Carnegie Illinois Steel Company demolished both furnaces in 1937. The site was briefly used as a circus grounds before the Sears Roebucks warehouse that still occupies the property was built in the 1940s.[11]

The AVRR, which became part of the Pennsylvania system, had numerous sidings that served mills and other manufacturing plants in the Strip District, Lawrenceville, and upriver in and beyond Allegheny County. Manufacturing along the AVRR and the river increased significantly in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The steel industry grew with the construction of facilities for the Frank Kneeland Machine Company (Figure 14; later the United Engine & Foundry Company), the Phoenix Roll Works (later Pittsburgh Rolls), McConway and Torley (Figure 15), Heppenstall Steel, the Pittsburgh Spring and Steel Company, and the Pittsburgh Foundry and Machine Company. Sanborn fire insurance maps depict the mills and other works in detail, depicting the locations in the various complexes of coke ovens, furnaces, engines, blacksmith shops, carpenter shops, tanks, boiler shops, offices, iron clad structures, kilns, storage buildings, annealing rooms, and other manufacturing components.

The Butler Street commercial district thrived during this era, as evidenced by several four-story buildings—the largest constructed on the street—erected in the 1880s. The commercial district also expanded northward beyond Allegheny Cemetery and 51st Street. (Figure 16) Throughout the neighborhood, corner buildings were modified with ground floor storefronts to serve as corner stores.

[11] "Furnace Built by Carnegie, Lucy No. 1, is Torn Down" (Pittsburgh Press, August 24, 1937), 17.

Penn Avenue had a more residential character than Butler Street, but storefronts began to appear between 34th and 35th Streets. Penn Avenue's relationship to the neighborhood was emphasized by the construction of the Penn Avenue gatehouse to Allegheny Cemetery in 1887. Built to the design of architects Macomb and Dull, this included a tower, reception room, and a residence for the gatekeeper.

Lawrenceville's residential precincts continued to expand to meet the burgeoning demand for housing. Some sections developed as a result of the 19th century subdivision of ribbon farms that extended uphill from the Allegheny River. An example is the Peter and Eliza Mowry farm, a 100-acre tract whose borders included the Allegheny River and what are now 51st and 52nd streets. Dr. Peter Mowry purchased the property in 1830, and immediately commissioned the construction of a Greek Revival mansion at what is now 5134 Carnegie Street. Dr. Mowry died in 1833; his widow, Eliza, lived in the mansion with other family members until she died in 1871. During the time that she lived there, the property also contained farm outbuildings and a small Episcopal chapel at what is now 5100 Carnegie Street, all since demolished. Butler Street extended through the Mowry property. (Figure 17)

In the 1860s, Eliza Mowry sold part of her land between the Allegheny River and Butler Street for industrial use. Carnegie, Kloman & Company ran the Lucy Furnace in a section of the former Mowry land along the Allegheny River until its demolition in 1930, and the Keystone Bridge Works was located between the Lucy Furnace and Butler Street. In 1872, Mowry's estate conveyed her residential property to four business partners, including Thomas Carnegie, a younger brother of Andrew, for $170,000. The property was bounded by Butler Street, Stanton Avenue, and the present location of 52nd Street. The former Mowry residence and its associated buildings appear to have been the only buildings on the Mowry land above Butler Street at the time of the sale. Between 1872 and 1873, the partners subdivided the property into streets and approximately 244 building lots southwest of 52nd Street, in what was known as the Plan of Lots laid out by Carnegie and Company.

The Carnegie and Company Plan filled in with houses between 1873 and the early twentieth century (Figures 18-19), as subdivisions of former ribbon farms between 52nd and 55th streets did at the same time. Nearly all of the lots were 20 feet wide by 100 feet deep. Some lot owners chose to build small alley houses at the rear of their lots, to rent to either family members or tenants to whom they were not related. In some cases, lot owners built small alley houses first, and lived in them until they could afford to construct larger front houses. Some property owners bought two or more lots, and constructed pairs or rows of party wall houses. With ownership of multiple adjoining lots, property owners had the option to build a larger number of narrower houses, if they expected that would bring a better return on investment: for example, four or even five, rather than three, houses on 60 feet of street frontage. The former Mowry residence on Carnegie Street was not demolished for subdivision, unlike the other ribbon farm houses in the Tenth Ward, and today occupies the 100-by-100-foot parcel on which it has stood for more than a century.

During this period, some of Lawrenceville's mansions were converted to institutional use, such as the Irwin mansion at 42nd and Sherrod streets (now demolished), which became the School for Blind Children in the early 1890s. Other former country estates were, like the ribbon farms, subdivided into building lots. Post-Civil War worker housing showed the influences of the Italianate, Second Empire, and Queen Anne styles and was more likely to be constructed of brick, not frame. The small, wood frame houses built during Lawrenceville's early settlement were not attractive to some of the neighborhood's new residents later in the nineteenth century. Between 38th and 43rd streets, a number of property owners demolished early frame houses and outbuildings in order to construct rows of brick party-wall houses that were larger, more ornate, and more valuable than what had previously stood on their sites, further increasing the density of the neighborhood.

For example, in the early 1880s, a developer constructed a row of six two-and-a-half-story brick party-wall houses at 187-197 38th Street; the previous plat map, in 1872, depicted one detached building on the site. (Figures 20-21) Another property owner had ten brick party-wall houses built on 42nd and 43rd streets at Willow Street in the mid- and late 1870s, taking the place of two detached dwellings shown on the 1872 plat map. (Figure 22) The twelve, brick party-wall, Italianate-influenced houses that went up at 114-136 41st Street in 1880 were built on the site of three detached buildings. (Figure 23) In 1889 Hugh Keating, an owner of oil and gas lands north of Pittsburgh, commissioned the construction of four large brick party-wall houses at 149-155 43rd Street and four smaller but still substantial brick alley houses at the rear of the property. (Figure 24) The new houses required the demolition of a small brick house that stood on part of the site. Construction projects such as these significantly altered the streetscapes of Lawrenceville during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, increasing the neighborhood's density and contributing to its population growth. While the 1872 plat maps did not distinguish between brick and frame dwellings, the fact that all of the extant buildings from 1840 or earlier in the original village of Lawrenceville are frame suggests that many of the freestanding early buildings that were demolished for brick rowhouse construction were frame as well.

Schools were built to serve Lawrenceville's expanded residential population. These included the Lawrence Public School on Charlotte Street (1871; first floor only still extant); the Bayard School (former Seventeenth Ward Public School) on Hatfield Street (1874); and the Washington Public School (1885; now the Stephen Foster Community Center) on Main Street. The latter school was built on property dedicated for the burial of soldiers and veterans by William Foster when he founded Lawrenceville in 1814. The establishment of Allegheny Cemetery soon superseded the function of this burial yard, and its interments were removed to Allegheny Cemetery when the school was built. All of these schools closed after the opening of Arsenal School on Butler Street in the 1930s and were reused in various ways.

History: 1890-1950

The last decade of the 19th century and first half of the 20th saw the maturity of Lawrenceville as an urban neighborhood complete with a dense fabric of residences, businesses, industries, and institutions. (Figures 25-27)

One of the most important events of this period was the disposition and transformation of the former Arsenal property. After ceasing manufacturing, the Arsenal was used by the U.S.

Government primarily as a storage depot. In 1904, the five acres closest to Penn Avenue were transferred to the Treasury Department for a Marine Hospital, constructed in 1908-1909; the Allegheny County Health Department now occupies the former Marine Hospital buildings. Downhill from this, the city obtained 13.25 acres of the former Arsenal grounds for a public park. (Figure 28) Arsenal Park formally opened on Independence, Day, 1907. The Pittsburgh Board of Education acquired the former Arsenal's frontage on the upper (southern) side of Butler Street and built the monumental Art Deco Arsenal School, a combined elementary and junior high school, in 1932.

Below Butler Street, the United States Bureau of Mines occupied former Arsenal buildings in the early twentieth century. In 1926, this portion of the Arsenal property below Butler Street was sold into private hands.[12] Howard Heinz, of the food manufacturing family, was identified as lessee of the property on a 1927 fire insurance map. The property was known as the Arsenal Terminal Warehouses by 1950; in that year it still contained the Arsenal guard house and both large and small dwellings that remained from the Arsenal.

The establishment of the park and school above Butler Street allowed the Arsenal location to remain the civic heart of Lawrenceville. Other important community institutions were founded nearby. In 1892, the Episcopal Home, a nursing care facility for the elderly and infirm now known (with additions) as Canterbury Place, was constructed at Penn Avenue and 40th Street. Six years later, the Lawrenceville Branch of the Carnegie Library was built on Fisk Street to the design of Alden and Harlow. Andrew Carnegie chose to locate this, the first neighborhood branch of his Pittsburgh Carnegie Library system, in Lawrenceville because of its proximity to his mills and the homes of the workers employed there. Its innovative design was intended to serve as a prototype for subsequent branches.

Another civic focal point arose in 1921 at the intersection of Butler Street and Penn Avenue with the addition of an important sculpture. Commissioned by the Lawrenceville Board of Trade with funds raised by the community, sculptor Allen G. Newman depicted a "doughboy," or World War I soldier in uniform, in bronze. Atop a tall plinth and surrounded by a paved plaza in front of the imposing Beaux Arts Pennsylvania National Bank Building (Beezer Brothers, 1902), the installation imbued the fork in the road with the gravity of a neighborhood landmark. The intersection became known as "Doughboy Square" and it announces entrance into the Lawrenceville district from the southwest.

By 1930, the Pennsylvania National Bank was one of four major financial institutions on Butler Street, along with the Arsenal Bank at 43rd and Butler (1884; renovated 1926), the Metropolitan National Bank at 41st Street (1902), and the Art Deco Allegheny Valley Bank in the 5100 block (1929-1930). These stolid masonry bank buildings, their architecture conveying stability and security, attested to the relative prosperity of at least some of Lawrenceville's populace, who were able to save money and utilize financial instruments to purchase homes, cars, and other assets. The quality and architectural elaboration of housing on streets such as Home, Main, and Fisk also attest to the presence of a comfortable middle class in Lawrenceville during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Between the banks and to their north and south, blending into the Penn Avenue commercial district of the Strip leading to downtown, stretched a thriving commercial corridor over 20 blocks long.

At 46th Street above Butler, the former country estate of iron magnate John Shoenberger was transformed into two important community assets after Shoenberger's death in 1889. The first of these was St. Margaret's Memorial Hospital, established in 1898 through Shoenberger's bequest of land and an endowment. St. Margaret's opened in 1910 and served Lawrenceville for 70 years. It was demolished in 1980 after the hospital moved to the nearby town of Aspinwall, but sections of its wrought iron fence remain at the perimeter of its campus (now Davison Apartments). Between St. Margaret's and Butler Street, the City of Pittsburgh purchased over four acres to establish another city park, Lawrence Park, in 1903. Renamed Leslie Park in 1943, it contained a swimming pool, wading pool, bath house, gymnasium, and ball fields.

These facilities served Lawrenceville's populace of, increasingly, eastern European immigrants. After World War I, many of the district's more well-to-do residents moved to newer suburban neighborhoods, and new immigrants arrived from Slovenia, Poland, and Croatia. They settled in ethnic enclaves and established religious institutions according to their traditional faiths. A Croatian community formed around 47th Street below Butler. The Holy Family parish, which moved from 41st and Foster Streets to 44th above Butler in 1940, served the Polish community; another Polish institution, established ca. 1920, was the Radiant Hall social club at 4514 Plummer Street. The Slovenian district was centered on St. Mary of the Assumption and the Slovenian Hall on 57th Street, outside the boundaries of the historic district.

Lawrenceville also had a Swedish immigrant population sufficient to support the construction of three Swedish churches: at 235 45th St., 42nd Street and Dunkeld Way, and on Plummer Street on the site of Radiant Hall. Andrew Carnegie actively recruited Swedish workers and engineers in the 1880s and 90s due to that country's reputation for high-quality production of iron and steel.[13]

Other, existing ethnic communities expanded. St. Augustine's Church had served Lawrenceville's German population on 37th Street above Butler since 1863. In 1901, it completed the current church to a design by John T. Comes of Rutan and Russell, modeled on St. Benno's church in Munich. The expansion was directly related to Lawrenceville's industrial success: the Frauenheim family, founders of Iron City Brewing (now Pittsburgh Brewing after an 1899 consolidation of the brewing industry), contributed $100,000 to the new church's construction.[14]

The Irish parish of St. John the Baptist also built a new church at its site on Liberty Avenue at 36th Street in 1903. St. Kieran's, another Irish immigrant parish, established in 1887, constructed its church at Carnegie and 53rd Streets in 1908. African American residents of Lawrenceville founded two churches during this period: Shiloh Baptist Church at 39th and Mintwood Streets (active into the 1980s) and Trinity Baptist on Ligonier Street near 34th.

In 1900, the population of Lawrenceville reached its peak of 33,000. Housing construction continued throughout the neighborhood in early 20th century styles such as Colonial Revival and Craftsman; in particular, the blocks between 42nd and 44th Streets above Davison Street were filled in with housing during this time. The single house, however small, continued to be the predominant housing type in Lawrenceville. Even after apartment buildings gained general social acceptance at around the turn of the 20th century, few were built here. A peculiar exception is the Cinderella Apartments at Penn Avenue and 37th Street, built in 1903 by John Fink, who lived nearby at 3609 Penn. Fink hired workers to fill forms for the building's walls with soft coal ash and cement. The mixture was tamped down and left to harden into slabs for the building's walls, which could then be raised all in one piece.

Transportation improvements from this era benefitted both trains and automobiles. In 1920, the B&O Railroad erected a new, double track Warren truss bridge at 33rd Street to replace an earlier bridge dating from 1884. The 40th Street Bridge, designed by architect Benno Janssen and engineer Charles Stratton Davis, replaced the Ewalt covered bridge in 1924.

Manufacturing in Lawrenceville peaked during the 1890-1950 period, with some of the oldest plants ending operations in the 1920s. Carnegie's Lucy Furnaces, in competition with the Isabella Furnace across the river in Etna, set production records before they ended operations in 1929 and 1930. The Upper Union Mill at 34th and 35th streets reportedly had 1,500 workers during World War I but was demolished in 1926. A smaller Carnegie mill, the adjoining Clark Mill, was demolished in the mid-1920s. The former Keystone Bridge Works (later the Shiffler plant of the American Bridge Company) continued operations throughout the 1890-1950 period. Heppenstall Steel, the H.K. Porter locomotive works, the Consolidated Ice Company, McConway Torley, Pittsburgh Rolls, the Frank Kneeland Machine Company, the Worthington Pump & Machinery Company, and the Pittsburgh Foundry & Machine Company were among the manufacturers who began operations in Lawrenceville in or just before the 1890-1950 period.

History: 1951-present

After the end of World War II, Lawrenceville lost many of its residents to newer, more fashionable neighborhoods and suburbs. Lawrenceville's population decreased steadily, and the businesses and institutions which relied on them—churches, schools, social halls, and hospitals—closed. With reduced tax revenues, the city's budget could not afford to maintain all the facilities in Arsenal and Leslie Parks, and these, too, declined. The popular swimming pool in Leslie Park closed in about 2000. Vacant storefronts began to appear on Butler Street and Penn Avenue, and at various street corners. Many of the neighborhood's large manufacturing plants closed, including Heppenstall Steel, the H.K. Porter Locomotive Works, Crucible Steel, American Bridge, and the Iron City Brewery. An exception is McConway Torley, which occupies the property at the foot of 48th Street that it moved to in the late 1880s.

The Allegheny Arsenal guard house and almost all the other remaining structures from the arsenal were demolished by the late 1980s. In 2017, the construction of an apartment building on part of the property was interrupted by the discovery of a cache of hundreds of cannonballs that had been buried in the vicinity of 39th and Butler streets.

In the early 21st century, Lawrenceville is seeing a revival. Storefronts and houses are again in demand, but much of the renovation and new construction threatens the historic character of the neighborhood. Lawrenceville's revitalization, however, has also been associated with residents advocating for the long-term maintenance of Arsenal Park, the Carnegie Library on Fisk Street, and other important facilities; for cleaner air; and for the preservation of vulnerable local landmarks such as the former Iron City Brewery. The Boys' and Girls' Club of Lawrenceville also moved to a larger new facility at around the turn of the 21st century, representing substantial new investment in the neighborhood.

Significance

Lawrenceville is significant under Criterion A in the areas of Commerce and Industry and under Criterion C for Architecture.

Its significance under Criterion A derives directly from the circumstances of its founding. In purchasing property to construct the Allegheny Arsenal at Lawrenceville in 1814, the United States government was the first to seize upon Lawrenceville's industrial potential. The Arsenal was the first rationally-laid-out factory complex in Pittsburgh and established Lawrenceville early on as a hub of manufacturing.[15] Its activities and the community of skilled and unskilled workers it attracted set Lawrenceville on a course of development fueled by industry along its riverbanks and, later, railroad lines.

At its peak, in 1900, Lawrenceville contained at least ten steel and iron mills, including Carnegie's Upper Union Mills and the formidable Lucy blast furnaces; the Keystone (American) Bridge Company; a lead works; a bronze works; manufacturers of lubricants, concrete, pumping equipment, roofing materials, beds, and macaroni; a locomotive works; two planing mills; a saw and tool manufacturer; a flour mill; two breweries; an oil refinery; the vast rail yards of two railroads; and the car barns and power house of the local street railway, all in addition to the Allegheny Arsenal, which still stood. Ultimately, Lawrenceville's attractiveness to industry would result in the growth, over 100 years, of a fully-realized, multi-faceted community of not only mills and factories but of thousands of densely-situated residences and the commercial, social, religious, educational, medical, and recreational resources that served Lawrenceville's workers and their families.

Principal among these was Butler Street, Lawrenceville's primary commercial corridor. From its earliest section at the original plat of the town between 38th and 41st Streets, over the course of the 19th century Butler Street extended in both directions to a length of nearly 30 blocks filled with merchants including grocers, butchers, confectioners, druggists, clothiers, jewelers, milliners, and shoemakers, and service providers including doctors, dentists, accountants, barbers, funeral homes, and a laundry. Two city parks fronted on Butler Street, which at its height also included six theaters; a YMCA; a bathhouse for mill workers who lacked bathing facilities at home (1904; a gift of Andrew Carnegie's partner Henry Phipps); a post office; a fire station; halls and auditoriums; saloons; churches; and an elementary school (McCandless School, now demolished). Near Allegheny Cemetery, which also had broad frontage on Butler Street, monument makers operated out of some of the district's few stone buildings. In the 1920s, garages, car dealerships, and motor repair shops opened on Butler Street. Butler Street's businesses prospered with Lawrenceville's workers, who earned wages first at the Arsenal, and later at the mills and oil refineries, and they provided all the goods and services those residents needed, along with some luxuries. Commercial development on Penn Avenue, though less intensive, supplemented that on Butler Street and served residents at the top of the hill.

Lawrenceville's dense and extensive residential fabric is essential to its present character and also intrinsically related to its industrial might. Throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries, blue-collar workers and their families moved to Lawrenceville to seek employment in its industries, fueling a robust market for builders, carpenters, bricklayers, painters, and other tradespeople. During the early 19th century, when Lawrenceville still had an essentially rural or suburban character, rows of small workers' houses coexisted with singular mansions on large estates, but by the mid-19th century, the row house typified the living situation of most Lawrenceville residents. Some were gracious, but others functioned essentially as dormitories: on alleys such as Dresden and Natrona ways, small houses were shared by groups of single steel mill and oil refinery workers, who alternated sleeping and working shifts with one another. Even the occasional detached house tended to be narrow, set at or close to the sidewalk line, and very near to its neighbors; in other words, situated much like a row house. The row house was the ideal housing module for Lawrenceville's growth into a densely-developed, self-contained, pedestrian-oriented community. The pattern of Lawrenceville's development was one which allowed most workers to commute by foot to the mills, householders to patronize nearby local businesses, children to walk to school, and families to walk to church.

The Lawrenceville Historic District is also significant under Criterion C both because it contains resources already listed on the National Register under this criterion and because it contains a significant collection of 19th- and early-20th -century architectural styles. Listed properties include: Allegheny Cemetery and, separately, its Butler Street Gatehouse; the buildings of the Arsenal, Bayard, Foster, Lawrence, McCleary, and Washington Vocational schools; the Consolidated Ice Company Factory No. 2 on 43rd St.; and the 40th Street Bridge.

In addition, this district achieves significance under Criterion C because of the variety and excellence of its examples of Victorian-era and post-Victorian design as adapted to the means and circumstances of Lawrenceville's community. Some of the district's landmark properties were designed by regionally-important architects, such as the Allegheny Cemetery Gatehouse by John Chislett; the Lawrenceville Branch of the Carnegie Library by Alden and Harlow; the YMCA (later the Boys' and Girls' Club) by Maurice Trimble; the Pennsylvania National Bank by Beezer Brothers; St. Augustine Church by John Comes; the Liberty Avenue office building of Iron City Brewery by Charles Bartberger; and the Fortieth Street (Washington's Crossing)

Bridge by Benno Janssen. The investments in these works of architecture speak to the aspiration—and ability—of Lawrenceville's leaders to provide fine facilities for its citizens.

But most of Lawrenceville's architectural richness comes from the adaptation of the revival and eclectic styles of the early 19th through the early 20th centuries to the modest, two-to-three story homes and other buildings of industrial workers, managers, merchants, and their families. Houses (as well as commercial and other types of buildings) went up in the Greek Revival, Gothic Revival, Italianate, Second Empire, Romanesque Revival, Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, and Craftsman styles, and good examples of each remain throughout the district, reflecting its long period of significance. Lawrenceville also contains a substantial number of buildings that are unstyled but nevertheless retain integrity; these fill in the streetscapes and even the alleys and help to document the spectrum of worker circumstances throughout the district's history and development. Lawrenceville's architectural richness lies not in opulence, but in its reflection of the range and preferences of architecture affordable to a hard-working, predominantly blue-collar populace.

Most of these buildings were the work of local building contractors. Pittsburgh's city government began to issue building permits in 1877, and these records—sparsely kept at first—begin to identify building contractors active in Lawrenceville from about 1880.

Together with city directory listings, building permit records indicate that in Lawrenceville, as in all Pittsburgh neighborhoods, late-19th-century building contractors did nearly all their work less than a mile from their own residences. Some of Lawrenceville's better-known local contractors were active in the neighborhood's civic life, underscoring the connection between Lawrenceville's built environment and its identity as a community. For example, William J. Zahniser of 184 Home Street built scores of houses and commercial buildings in what is now known as Central Lawrenceville (between 40th and 51st streets, Stanton Avenue and Liberty Avenue) between the 1880s and the first years of the 20th century, both as a contractor and as a speculative developer. Zahniser also represented Lawrenceville in Pittsburgh City Council, and later in life was president of the Metropolitan Bank (now PNC Bank) at 41st and Butler streets. William Bauersmith of 171 44th Street was another active builder who was among the founders of the Arsenal Bank in 1871. The bank hired John Wolz of 181 46th Street to construct its building at 4300 Butler Street for $17,000 in 1883.

Contractors like Mark Lydon and Michael Senge of Keystone Street were Zahniser, Bauersmith, and Wolz's counterparts in the section of the neighborhood northeast of 51st Street. Building permit records indicate that both were active contractors. Senge's own ca. 1890 home at 5272 Keystone Street, with a mansard roof and Queen Anne window, illustrates his socio-economic status and construction abilities. In 1896, Lydon built two of the most important new buildings in his section of the neighborhood, the St. Kieran convent and parsonage in the 5300 block of Carnegie Street. Nearby, he also constructed the $80,000 McCleary School at Holmes Street and McCandless Avenue in 1900.

Beginning around the turn of the 20th century, at the height of Lawrenceville's population and prosperity, regionally prominent firms won contracts to build some of the neighborhood's most architecturally sophisticated buildings. William Miller & Sons constructed the Lawrenceville branch of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh on Fisk Street and the landmark St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church on 37th Street above Butler Street; the firm also built Pittsburgh landmarks such as the Carnegie Library in Oakland, the Arrott Building at Fourth Avenue and Wood Street, the Allegheny County Morgue, and the Washington and Westmoreland county courthouses. When St. Kieran parish arranged to build its new church at 53rd and Carnegie streets in 1908, rather than hiring a Lawrenceville contractor it employed Thomas Reilly of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Reilly had constructed five buildings for Saint Francis Hospital near 45th Street and Penn Avenue in 1907. Reilly's best-known local work included the construction of St. Paul's Roman Catholic Cathedral in Oakland, the Third Presbyterian Church in Shadyside, and Rodef Shalom synagogue in the Oakland-Shadyside area.

At Penn Avenue and Butler Street, the local firm of Calhoun & Miller built the Pennsylvania National Bank in 1902. Both of its principals lived in Lawrenceville, and the firm constructed a number of houses in the community. The Pennsylvania National Bank was likely one of the last large, architecturally sophisticated Lawrenceville buildings to be constructed by a Lawrenceville contractor, but Lawrenceville builders continued to build houses and smaller commercial structures in their neighborhood in the late 1890s and first years of the 20th century.

Comparisons

Lawrenceville resembles other Victorian-era districts in Pittsburgh characterized by riverside industrial development, linear commercial corridors, and walkable blocks of dense residential fabric, punctuated by civic and private institutions such as libraries, schools, churches, and hospitals. Examples include the Strip District, which links Lawrenceville to downtown Pittsburgh via Penn and Liberty avenues and the railroad; Hazelwood, whose steel and coke mills were located on the north shore of the Monongahela River; and the South Side, where the colossal Jones and Laughlin steel mill was located along the south banks of the Mon. The South Side's first industry was the production of glass; Hazelwood, like Lawrenceville, was the location of country estates before its post-Civil War urbanization; and the Strip District was an early transportation nexus, making it both a manufacturing and a distribution center.

Separated by rivers and by Pittsburgh's rugged topography, all of these neighborhoods functioned essentially as autonomous towns unto themselves. Unlike later streetcar suburbs, whose residents commuted by public transit and, later, by automobile to employment centers, these neighborhoods arose around the mills, factories, and plants that attracted workers who needed to reside close by. The neighborhoods participated in the national, and even international, economy via their industries, but they also developed vigorous local economies and distinctive civic and social cultures.

In all of these neighborhoods, industry spread along the riverbanks, taking advantage of proximity to rail and river transportation systems. Beyond the riverfront industrial zone, in each neighborhood a commercial corridor developed. The rest of the river flats—and, in the case of Lawrenceville, Hazelwood, and the South Side, the steep hillsides beyond—became built up with houses as mill production grew, attracting more workers, managers, and their families. (The Strip District differs in occupying only the flat strip of land, for which it was named, along the river. As a consequence, the Strip District's character is far more industrial and commercial, and far less residential, than Lawrenceville's, the South Side's, or Hazelwood's. (Many of the Strip's workers lived above the district in the neighborhood known as Polish Hill.) Amid this industrial, commercial and residential fabric were established the churches, schools, and other civic and social institutions which served the neighborhoods' populations, many of whom were immigrants. Similar architectural styles, dating predominantly from the post-Civil War years to the early 20th century, characterize their streetscapes, although in Hazelwood, the predominant house type is not the row house but the detached, single-family dwelling.

Three significant factors distinguish Lawrenceville from all of these comparable riverside industrial neighborhoods. The first of these is the date of Lawrenceville's founding and its very early industrial character, established by the Arsenal. The Arsenal and its workers also shaped the location and character of Lawrenceville's commercial core on heavily-traveled Butler Street and its residential blocks of housing. Lawrenceville's founding along with the Arsenal in 1814 gives it a robust antebellum history that is not seen in other Pittsburgh neighborhoods outside of downtown. As a consequence, Lawrenceville's period of significance is considerably longer, and its range of historic resources larger, with many more early and mid-19th century examples.

The second factor is open space. This, too, owes partly to the Arsenal, without which such prime acreage of land would not have been preserved at the center of Lawrenceville in the early 20th century when the city sought to establish a park. Arsenal Park provides a recreationally rich, historically layered landscape in the heart of the district. It publicly recognizes, and grants access to, the very location of Lawrenceville's historic origins. By far the greatest amount of open space in the neighborhood resides in Allegheny Cemetery. Inclusion of such a large and important Victorian landscape, dating from a time before municipal parks departments, sets Lawrenceville apart from other densely-urbanized neighborhoods of its era. The adjacent St. Mary's Cemetery and Leslie Park augment the sense of spaciousness in Lawrenceville's midst and preserve some of the feeling of the area's early history as a rural retreat from urban life closer to Pittsburgh's Point.

Finally, Lawrenceville—unlike comparable districts—still includes many resources from its industrial period. Buildings and structures associated with the Phoenix Roll Works, Crucible Steel Works, Kneeland Machine Company, McConway and Torley, H. K. Porter Locomotive Works, Iron City Brewery, and even the Allegheny Arsenal still stand in today's Lawrenceville Historic District. Although their presence is a fraction of what it was at Lawrenceville's peak of industrial production, the Historic District between the Allegheny River and Butler Street contains the most extensive and various collection of extant resources from Pittsburgh industrial might of any area in the city. These surviving remnants of Lawrenceville's industrial riverfront are essential to the district's ability to convey its character as a community founded on and sustained by industry.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The boundary of the Lawrenceville Historic District is shown as a solid line on the accompanying site plan and location map.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundaries of the Lawrenceville Historic District generally correspond with the present and historic boundaries of the Lawrenceville Neighborhood, with minor deletions along the outer edge of the boundary (generally one parcel deep) in places that lack integrity because of modern development. An important exception is on the northeast side of the neighborhood. Here the historic district boundary generally follows 55th Street and the property line of the Allegheny Cemetery. The section of Lawrenceville between 55th Street and its historic boundary at 62nd Street is excluded from the historic district boundary because of lack of integrity caused by modern intrusions, the demolition or historic industrial properties along the Allegheny River, and the general lack of continuity between an isolated residential section between 56th and 57th streets and the neighborhood's residential core southwest of 55th Street. Minor hillside areas within the neighborhood along Kendall, Leydon, 54th, and Camelia streets were excluded from northeast boundary of the district because of lack of continuity with adjacent areas of the district due to topography and a generally lack of architectural integrity. Along Penn Avenue between 40th and 45th Streets, the historic district boundary includes both sides of Penn Avenue to encompass a cohesive streetscape along this important commercial corridor. Though the south side of Penn Avenue between 40th and 45th streets is not within the current boundary of the Lawrenceville Neighborhood, this area was within the historic boundary of Lawrenceville Borough prior to annexation by the City of Pittsburgh. Along the south border of the district, parts of the neighborhood along Sassafras Street are excluded from the historic district boundary because of lack of integrity and lack of visual continuity with adjacent parts of the district; all parts of the Iron City Brewery complex along Sassafras Street are included in the historic district boundary. On the district's southwest side, the boundary follows the neighborhood line at 33rd Street, but the boundary does not include the elevated section of the Pittsburgh Junction Railroad above 33rd Street because that railroad line was not historically associated with significant development in Lawrenceville. On the district's northwest side, the entire Allegheny Valley Railroad segment between 33rd and 55th streets is included within the historic district boundary.

Figure 9: This 1936 image, looking southeast on 41st Street from Foster Street, depicts what are probably now the oldest houses in Lawrenceville, the wood frame dwellings at 157 and 159 41st Street. One or both date to the 1820s. Most of the facade at 159 41st is visible, and only the front porch of 157 41st can be seen from the photographer's vantage point. The house at far left, 155 41st Street, also still stands. Houses like 157 and 159 41st Street are among the small wood frame dwellings in the original town of Lawrenceville that, if only by chance, were never demolished to make room for larger brick houses. Figure 15: Merchants built commercial buildings in various styles on and near the 5100 block of Butler Street in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Many merchants and their families lived on their buildings' upper floors. City Photographer's Collection, University of Pittsburgh.

Figure 16: The 1872 G.M. Hopkins Company map depicting part of what is now the Tenth Ward of Pittsburgh. The Mowry property, extending between present 51st and 52nd streets, had been partly sold off to allow construction of Carnegie, Kloman & Company's Lucy Furnace and the Keystone Bridge Works, but residential subdivision had not yet taken place.

Figure 17: In 1890, the construction of houses on 20 by 100 foot lots on the 5100 blocks of Carnegie, Keystone, Holmes, and Duncan streets, part of the former Mowry estate, was well along. The 5200 blocks of those streets were developing as well. G.M. Hopkins Company.
